- 1 • Encourages PCA congregations to assess whether the missionaries and agencies they 2 support use or promote Bible translations that remove familial language in reference 3 to persons of the Trinity, and if so, to pursue correction, and failing that, to withdraw 4 their support;
- 5 • Encourages PCA congregations to support biblically sound and appropriately
6 contextualized efforts to see Christ’s Church established among resistant peoples;
- 7 • Calls PCA churches and agencies to collaborate with each other and the broader 8 Church to discern and implement biblical authority in gospel contextualization.
- 9 • Authorizes the Moderator, as an aid to greater gospel faithfulness throughout the 10 PCA and the broader Church, to appoint a study committee to report to the 40th 11 General Assembly concerning Insider Movements, including but not limited to:
- 12 ○ A summary and biblical assessment of Insider Movements’ histories, 13 philosophies, and practices;
- 14 ○ A biblical response to interpretations of Scripture used in defense of Insider 15 Movements;
- 16 ○ An examination of the theological impact of removing familial language for 17 the Trinity from Bible translations;
- 18 ○ An assessment of PCA missions partners regarding the influence of Insider 19 Movement within them, including assessment of their theology of religion, 20 ecclesiology, Scripture, and relationship to the Emergent Church;
- 21 ○ An explanation of the relevance and importance of this issue for the PCA;
- 22 ○ Suggestions for identifying and assessing the influence of Insider Movements

PREFACE

The Study Committee’s History, Approach, and Product

The 39th General Assembly (June 2011) instructed its moderator, Ruling Elder Dan Carrell, to appoint members to an ad interim study committee, the Study Committee on Insider Movements (SCIM). The 2011 General Assembly instructed the SCIM, among other things, to undertake “an examination of the theological impact of removing familial language for the Trinity from Bible translations” and to provide a biblical assessment of “Insider Movements’ histories, philosophies, and practices.” The SCIM met in December 2011 and recognizing the scope of its task, divided the mandate of Overture 9, “A Call to Faithful Witness,” between matters of biblical translation and issues related to Insider Movements.

It should be noted that the 2011 General Assembly also authorized the SCIM to make “an assessment of PCA missions partners regarding the influence of Insider Movements within them” in a variety of theological categories. The SCIM understands the value of such assessments and presents this Report as its principal contribution to understanding and evaluating Insider Movement (IM) thinking and methodology. Individual evaluation of every PCA mission partner and/or reported Insider Movement around the world exceeds the capacity of this Committee to perform. As a step towards the fulfillment of that assessment, we advise individual churches to use this report as a resource in evaluating relationships with mission partners, for the greater advance of the gospel.

The SCIM has now presented materials at three General Assemblies: the 40th (2012), the 41st (2013), and the 42nd (2014).

1. 40th General Assembly (2012)

Following the appointment of the committee in 2011, the SCIM produced Part One of the SCIM report, “A Call to Faithful Witness: Like Father, Like Son.” Its recommendations were adopted by the 40th General Assembly (June 2012). This report critiqued a group of recent Bible translations that avoided applying the titles “Son of God” and “Father” to persons of the Godhead, and put forth the doctrinal rationale for preserving the historic divine familial terms.

As part of the approved recommendations, the 40th General Assembly granted a year’s extension to the ad interim committee for it to work on Part Two of its Report on Insider Movements.

2. 41st General Assembly (2013)

Part Two of the SCIM report provided a biblical, theological, and confessional analysis of the IM paradigm, including a series of affirmations and denials to apply in contexts around the world. The report included recommendations, including “2. that the 42nd General Assembly make available and recommend for study ‘A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements’ to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.” At the same assembly, TE Nabeel Jabbour presented Minority Report 2013, which he claimed was “supplemental” to the Committee Report 2013. Since the committee did not and does not share this opinion of the Minority Report’s compatibility, a lengthy debate ensued over a Minority Report motion to recommend both the Committee Report 2013 and the Minority Report 2013 to churches and presbyteries in the PCA. The debate concluded by a vote to recommit both reports to the SCIM without instruction for delivery of its report(s) at the 42nd General Assembly (2014).

Having studied carefully the floor debate at the 41st General Assembly, having witnessed the confusion about the alleged compatibility of the Minority Report with the Committee Report 2013, and having interacted with numbers of assembly commissioners, the Committee received the clarion call to provide greater accessibility to the key problems within the IM-paradigm and to explain why the paradigms at work within the Committee Reports and the Minority Reports are irreconcilable.

Accordingly, the SCIM determined to provide a selection of resources to the 42nd General Assembly – including an Abridged Committee Report and careful Analyses of Minority Report 2013 and Minority Report 2014, in which we elucidate the Minority Reports’ incompatibility with the Committee Report.

3. 42nd General Assembly 2014

Each component of this 2014 committee report, “Part 2: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements,” seeks to foster faithful biblical, theological, and methodological reflection on the issues IM poses. For efficiency reasons, this report also centers on Insider Movement Paradigms (IMPs) in the Muslim world, though IM extends into other people groups as well, including those who are Hindu or Buddhist. Focused in its analysis, this report does not say everything that could be said. Neither is it intended to provide the final word in addressing and analyzing these issues. It does, however, expose critical problems shared by IM-paradigms, none of which should be taken lightly.

1 The sections of this 2014 report are organized in a way to provide an initial 2 cursory and accessible analysis followed by more detailed study: 3

- 4 • Section A. Abridged Committee Report. Drawn from the Committee Report 2013, 5 the brief and accessible Abridged Committee Report surveys key 6 theological/methodological approaches common to IM paradigms, and offers a 7 concise critique. We encourage Abridged Committee Report readers to receive its 8 contents as a partial, but pointed analysis of salient IM-paradigm defects.
- 9 • Section B. Declarations: Affirmations and Denials. The Affirmations and Denials 10 (collectively, “Declarations”) are in two ways tethered explicitly to the Abridged 11 Committee Report and to the Committee Report 2013 (Revised) in Attachment 1: 12 (1) the Abridged Committee Report references the Affirmations/Denials relevant to 13 each of its sections, and (2) the Declarations themselves reference sections of the 14 Committee Report 2013 (Revised) which undergird their summary statements. We 15 encourage Abridged Committee Report readers to study the Affirmations and 16 Denials in view of their vital dependence upon the theology developed in the 17 respective rationale sections of the full Committee Report in Attachment 1. The 18 Declarations are principal in nature and identify the ideals toward which 19 missionaries, evangelists, and churches should aspire, while exercising pastoral 20 discernment as to the best path toward those goals in a particular ministry context.
21 Any variety of local circumstances may delay or hinder the realization of certain 22 ideals, but biblical principles should always determine and shape all missiological 23 consideration. The Declarations should also be digested as a whole, since any one of 24 them in isolation may present an unbalanced idea.
- 25 • Section C. Analysis of the Minority Report 2014. The Analysis of Minority Report 26 2014 provides an important, though brief, studied analysis of the Minority Report 27 2014. Because of the interrelationship between the two minority reports, this analysis 28 should be considered in combination with the Analysis of the Minority Report 29 (2013) in Attachment 2.
- 30
- 31 • Attachment 1. Committee Report 2013 (Revised). The Committee Report 2013 32 (Revised) includes an Executive Summary and provides the most robust analysis of 33 the IM-paradigm. All components of the 2014 report depend on the theological, 34 hermeneutical, and methodological analysis contained in this extended report.
- 35 • Attachment 2. Analysis of the Minority Report 2013. The Minority Report 2013 is 36 critical because key features of its theological paradigm continue to operate in the 37 2014 Minority Report. The content of this Minority Report Analysis 2013 parallels 38 the structure and theological reasoning of the Abridged Committee Report (Section 39 A), but exposes IM-sympathetic theological and methodological problems at work in

1 the 2013 Minority Report (MR2013) itself. For fullest analysis, we encourage 2 Analysis of the Minority Report 2013 readers to read the Abridged Committee 3 Report (Section A), and to study the whole Committee Report 2013 (Revised) 4 (Attachment 1) and the Minority Report 2013 itself, which begins on p. 2333 of 5 this document. (Please note that the page references in Attachment 2 are to the 2013 6 Commissioner Handbook page numbers, which are found at the bottom right of the 7 MR 2013 pages in this document.)

- 8 • Attachment 3. Christians of Muslim Background (CMB) Input. This brief list of 9 comments from Muslim converts to Christ, though hardly exhaustive, clearly 10 illustrates how some believers in Muslim countries perceive the practice and effects 11 of the IM paradigm.
- 12 • Attachment 4. History of Modern Evangelicalism as Related to Missions. This 13 brief treatment of the history of missions in the United States supplements the 14 Committee Report 2013 (Revised) in its consideration of the historical background to 15 the IM paradigm.
- 16 • Attachment 5. God and Allah. This brief analysis exposes the components involved 17 in discerning the way in which we must think about the relationship between the 18 triune God of Scripture and the term Allah.

 20 To locate each these documents, see the Table of Contents at the beginning of this 21 2014 report.

22 23 Conclusion and Thanks

24 Finally, some words of gratitude are in order. First, we thank the commissioners of 25 the PCA for their ongoing support and encouragement in the tasks given us by the 2011 26 Overture #9. Second, we are grateful to staff of the Administrative Committee for its 27 assistance in preparing these documents for publication. Third, we are grateful to 28 interviewees, whose input helped the SCIM grapple with key issues. We appreciate the 29 competent care and input provided by numerous readers outside of the committee (both 30 advocates and opponents of the IM paradigms we discuss), who provided useful feedback 31 and helped shape this report into its final form. Finally, we appreciate the input from many 32 Christians of Muslim background (CMBs), whose background in Islam and first-hand 33 exposure to IM practices provide compelling evidence of the seriousness of the theological 34 and missiological stakes. Their own sacrifices in ministry and the risks they take for gospel 35 faithfulness are as convicting as they are humbling. Having heard their plea, we urge our 36 fellow commissioners to give ear to the alarm and consternation expressed by these brothers 37 in Christ concerning the effects of Western IM paradigms, advocacy, and funding.

1 Study Committee Recommendations to the 42nd General Assembly

3

1. That “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” serve as a Partial Report (Part Two of Two Parts).

2. That the 42nd General Assembly make available and recommend for study “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.

6

8

3. That the 42nd General Assembly dismiss the ad interim Study Committee on Insider Movements with thanks.

Section A. Abridged Committee Report¹

Introduction to Insider Movement Paradigms (IMPs)

In the recent controversy over "Insider Movements," an "Insider" is a person accepted as a true member of his culture, and a "movement" is a trend in which groups of people (as opposed to scattered individuals) profess faith in Christ, often without missionary influence. Insider Movement believers in Jesus perceive "Christianity" as a foreign culture. They continue to self-identify as part of the broader Muslim, Hindu, or other community, because they have not changed their name, style of dress and speech, or country of residence. They feel little need, and sometimes substantial reluctance, to affiliate with a national Church which may pressure new converts to adopt attitudes and practices which antagonize their previous social circle, such as the cultural practices mentioned above.

Western apologists for Insider Movement paradigms (IMPs) have sometimes encouraged new believers to continue to think of themselves as Muslims, Hindus, etc., rather than joining with established national churches, or thinking of themselves as Christians. IMP proponents insist on their intention to approach missiology from Scripture, without compromise. Do they succeed? Are religion and culture so tightly linked that a Christ-follower can only stay within his birth culture by also staying within his birth religion? This report evaluates the approaches of numerous prominent IMP apologists and draws two large-scale conclusions which characterize the mainstream of IMP thought. (1) IMP concepts of "religion" and "identity" functionally exalt sociology over Scripture. (2) IMPs separate the Church from the Kingdom of God, and the work of the Church from the work of the Holy Spirit in making disciples.

1. IMP concepts of "religion" and "identity" functionally exalt sociology over Scripture.

1.1 Religion

From ancient times through the Renaissance up to today, some have suggested that the General Revelation flowing from the natural world gives men sufficient testimony to know that which is important to know about God. This is not correct. The tools of human learning by themselves could never provide sufficient knowledge for salvation, let alone to change men's rebellious hearts. (WCF 1:1) They can contribute reliably to our understanding only to the extent that they submit to scriptural authority. For instance, anthropology cautions us to distinguish universal

¹ All quotations in the Abridged Committee Report come from the body of the full report in Attachment 1. Full footnote and bibliographical reference information can be found there.

1 values from our own culturally determined biases. Yet anthropology itself, like any 2 scholarly community, forms a subculture from those trained in its habits, a 3 subculture not itself immune to bias, not immune to critique by Scripture. The 4 reverse is not true: Scripture is not open to critique by anthropology or any other 5 human endeavor, and tenets clearly derived from Scripture should not be questioned 6 based on human experience (for instance, human interpretation of the world around 7 us) which seems to the contrary.

9 [See A&D 2 and 3]
10

11 The interpretations of Acts 15 offered in IMP literature provide an 12 opportunity to see these abstract ideas applied to a test case. In that text, the leaders 13 of the early Church instructed the Gentile-predominant church in Antioch that they 14 need not undergo the Jewish rite of circumcision to win acceptance as part of Christ's 15 Church. This "Jerusalem Council" was part of the unique, divinely planned transition 16 between the Old and New Covenants, opening a door into the people of God for 17 Gentiles. Discussion of this transition gets much attention throughout the New 18 Testament. (Acts 10-11; Rom. 4; Gal. 2-4; Eph. 2; etc.) 19

20 IMP proponent Rebecca Lewis finds an additional ongoing implication: One 21 should not add to this unchanging gospel "additional requirements such as adherence 22 to Christian religious traditions." To do so will "cloud or encumber the gospel." "A 23 religious framework drawn from historical Christianity," which she distinguishes 24 from faith in Christ, is simply not necessary. Like the zealous but mistaken Judaizers 25 who troubled the early church, "if we demand that all believers adopt our own 26 religious traditions and identity, then we are actually undermining the integrity of the 27 gospel." Jewish is to Gentile then, as Christian is to Muslim now.
28

29 Granted that not all the trappings of modern Western Christianity have 30 biblical merit, is the Muslim/Christian contrast truly comparable to the New 31 Testament's Jewish/Gentile contrast? When the New Testament articulates the 32 reasons that Gentile Christians are not bound to observe peculiarly Old Covenant 33 forms and practices, it pursues two very different courses than Lewis's arguments.
34 The first argument is redemptive-historical. Galatians 3-4 and the entire book of 35 Hebrews argue for the unique, planned obsolescence of the Old Covenant.
36 Circumcision of Gentiles would obscure that plan. The second argument is 37 soteriological. Paul's opponents in Galatia (the "Judaizers") were pressing 38 circumcision and the other ordinances of the Mosaic Law (see Gal. 4:10, 5:3) as 39 grounds of the Christian's justification (Gal. 2:15-16; cf. Acts 15:1, 5). Paul argues 40 in both Galatians 3 and Romans 4 that such a "faith plus works" teaching was 41 contrary to the Old Testament itself. It is therefore mistaken to understand the 1 Council primarily in terms of the retention or exchange of social and religious 2 identity. IM readings pose questions to Acts 15 that Luke was not concerned to 3 answer, and derive principles from the Council that lack sufficient exegetical 4 warrant.

5 [See A&D 1]

6 7 1.2 Identity

8 Similarly, an IM-related question such as, "How does a believer's identity in 9 Christ relate to his identity within his social network?" should not be approached 10 without first carefully and biblically considering what "identity" is in the first place.
 11 What does it mean to retain a Muslim identity, as some IM proponents propose? If 12 cultural identity truly cannot be separated from religious identity, then how can a 13 faithful convert be said to retain his cultural identity without promoting false 14 religion? Popular discussions of "identity" often focus on self-awareness of identity 15 or sense of identity, rather than on identity as an objective reality in terms of (1) man 16 as the image of God, and (2) God as interacting with man by means of covenant, 17 with Christ as the ultimate and perfect example of man in each case. Any horizontal 18 consideration of identity drawn from inter-human relationships must consciously 19 subordinate to the vertical relationship between man and God.

 21 Romans 1:18-2:17 grounds the necessity of Christ's redemptive work for all 22 of Adam's descendants—Jews and Gentiles alike— in the pervasive problem of 23 disobedience and corruption. Adam's descendants willfully, actively, and persistently 24 seek to suppress the voice of God. Substitute deities and substitute religious practices 25 supplant the truth, and indeed the idolaters who practice these false religions do so to 26 their own condemnation. "He who is not for me is against me," claims Jesus (Matt.
 27 12:30). Any nonchristian religion, including Old Testament worship practiced in 28 rebellion against Christ, is "elemental principles" (NEV) or "elemental things" 29 (NASB)—ta stoicheia (Galatians 4; cf. Heb. 5:12; Col. 2:8, 20), demonically 30 prompted vain religious or philosophical means for seeking self-redemption. Paul 31 places Gentile religions and the corrupted version of Jewish religion—typified by a 32 rejection of Judaism's Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth— under one rubric: "in slavery to 33 powers utterly beyond their control."

 35 Every human is in covenant with God—as either covenant keeper or 36 covenant breaker. As descendants of Adam, all (before saving grace takes hold) are 37 covenant breakers, making the covenant relationship one of curse rather than 38 blessing. Covenantal participation is not culturally or ethnically restrictive, as no 39 human culture or person is understood properly apart from this primary covenantal 40 character of human identity. Scripture's Covenant Identity Paradigm (CIP) lays out

1 two parallel yet mutually exclusive options (Romans 5; 1 Corinthians 15): Adam is 2 the head of all unbelieving humanity, whereas Jesus Christ is the head of his 3 church—those who trust in him by faith (cf. Ephesians 1-2). Everyone is defined by 4 one of these two heads. Faith in Christ transfers a person from one covenantal 5 identity to another (Rom. 5:12-21; cf. Eph. 2:1-10) and therefore from one covenant 6 allegiance to another.

8 In biblical categories, there exists no grey, middle kingdom. Everyone is 9 linked to one covenant head (Adam or Christ) and to one kingdom (darkness or 10 light), though one's understanding of God's redemptive and gracious transfer grows 11 in the conscious experience. Scripture portrays salvation in terms that are categorical, 12 paradigmatic, ultimate, and wholly redefining: from darkness to light, death to life.
13 The biblical core of redemptive grace is union with Christ in his resurrection (cf.
14 Eph. 1:16-23; 1 Corinthians 15) or, as described in John's Gospel, new birth from 15 above (John 1:12; John 3:1ff).

17 In Christ alone is true religion. Thus the biblical CIP combats any 18 accommodation to all false religions, including Islam as a religion. Islam as a faith 19 system, despite its leeching upon certain features of God's truth in general 20 revelation, is shaped by fallen humanity and is a stronghold of Satan. It deceives 21 those whom it touches. Islamic religious beliefs and practice cannot be treated with 22 neutrality, any more than believers in the West should treat their background in 23 secular humanism as spiritually neutral. Association with Islamic religion, therefore, 24 carries serious risks for any professing followers of Christ, whether nationals or 25 missionaries. Scripture presents false religion as both false and deceiving, and no 26 faithful missiology will ever minimize the antithesis between biblical revelation and 27 any other religion, religious system, or faith system. It is inconceivable how a person 28 who identifies as "Muslim" can escape problematic associations with the false 29 teachings and practices of Islam.

33 Citing 1 Cor. 7:17-20, Rebecca Lewis contends "that no one should consider 34 one religious form of faith in Christ to be superior to another." Elsewhere she 35 proposes, "if well-meaning Christians tell seekers that they must come to God not 36 just through Christ but also through Christianity, [we ought to] help the Christians 37 understand this requirement is 'not in line with the truth of the Gospel (sic).'" 38 Similarly, John Ridgway understands 1 Cor. 7 to teach that the Insider has a 39 "spiritual identity" distinct from an allegedly physical "cultural and religious 40 identity."

Truly enough, Paul in 1 Cor. 7 does teach is that a new believer should remain in and serve the Lord in the context of his family, community, and vocation (1 Cor. 7:20). Paul emphasizes (1) the obligation of both the circumcised and the uncircumcised concerning “keeping the commandments of God” (v.19), and (2) the obligation of both the slave and the freedman to serve Christ as Lord. In each case, Paul is not concerned to address issues specifically relating to a “religious form of faith” or “religious culture.” Rather, Paul emphasizes the believer’s fundamental allegiance and obligation to Christ, precisely in the circumstances of family, community, and vocation in which the believer finds himself. So strong is this commitment that Paul can even envision a situation in which a believer would need to alter his circumstances in order to be obedient to Christ (see 1 Cor. 7:36). Paul, unlike Ridgeway, sees no distinction between "religious" and "spiritual" identity, and has no hesitation in deeming “one religious form of faith in Christ to be superior to another,” as Lewis has argued.

IMP proponents also appeal to 1 Corinthians 8-10. Woodberry, for example, speaks of both Jesus and Paul as “incarnating the gospel among people whose worldview was similar to that of most Muslims,” and Paul in particular as “liv[ing] out . . . that model . . . in different religio-cultural contexts.” Woodberry relates 1 Cor. 9:19-23 to Paul’s words in 1 Cor. 11:1 (“Be imitators of me, as I am of Christ”) and to Paul’s actions in circumcising Timothy (Acts 16:3) and taking “converts with him into the Temple to be purified” (Acts 21:26). Because Woodberry understands “Islamic Law [to be] based on the Law of Judaism,” and because Paul is said to “teach adaptability even to a pagan culture like Corinth as long as one is guided by conscience and by the desire to glorify God and see people be saved (1 Cor. 10:23-33),” he believes that both Paul’s principles and actions ~~to~~ have direct bearing on Insider paradigm methods and practices.

However, any direct application of 1 Cor. 8-10 to Muslim circumstances must account for the redemptive historical particularities of the text, as discussed in the section "Religion" above. An alleged connection between the Mosaic Law and subsequent Islamic Law does not leave one at liberty simply to substitute the word “Jew” in this text with the word “Muslim.” Indeed, Paul takes pains to compare the Corinthian church's situation to that of syncretistic Israel in the wilderness (10:1-13). Against that background, Paul expressly prohibits idolatry (10:7a, 14) and warns against “desir[ing] evil as they did” (10:6), and “indulg[ing] in sexual immorality as some of them did” (10:8a). Such sins would “put Christ to the test” and ~~to~~ subject the people of God to divine displeasure (10:9a, 10:9b-10). Paul develops this analogy between the New Covenant church and Old Covenant Israel precisely because the

1 sins Israel committed in the wilderness also were tempting and threatening the 2 church in Corinth—evil desire, sexual immorality, and idolatry. Just as Israel sinned 3 by compromising with the immorality and idolatry of the Moabites (Num. 25:9, cited 4 at 10:8b), so the Corinthians are subject to compromise with the immorality and 5 idolatry of the pagan culture around them (1 Cor. 5:1-2, 6:12-20; 10:14-22; cf. 8:1-6 13, 10:23-11:1). Paul fears a spiritually destructive complacency among the 7 Corinthians with respect to these issues, and urges their continued vigilance against 8 sin (1 Cor. 10:12-13).

10 Paul appeals to the believer’s union and communion with Christ as guiding 11 principles for negotiating the moral questions arising from Christian living in a 12 pagan culture. Because we partake of the Lord’s Table and the Lord’s cup—which is 13 participation in Christ’s body and blood—we therefore cannot “drink . . . the cup of 14 demons” or “partake of . . . the table of demons” (1 Cor. 10:16, 21-22). We are 15 united to Christ and commune not only with him, but also with one another as 16 members of his body (1 Cor. 10:17). Paul directly appeals to this reality as he 17 counsels believers about buying meat previously offered to idols (1 Cor. 8:1-13).

19 In short, Paul acknowledges in 1 Corinthians 8-10 the complexities of 20 Christians living within a culture hostile to the faith. He does not counsel a 21 categorical extraction and separation from the world around us (cf. 1 Cor. 4:10).
22 Neither is he unaware of or indifferent to the genuine spiritual threats posed to the 23 Christian attempting to live in the context of the culture in which the Lord has called 24 him to live (cf. 1 Cor. 7:17-24). Paul’s instructions to the Corinthians return to a 25 fundamental guiding principle—the believer’s identity in Christ (CIP) is the identity 26 by which all other decisions about relationships, partnerships, networks, and 27 practices are to be made. That identity requires one to pursue holiness, whether 28 within or outside of the social networks of which he was part when he became a 29 believer (1 Cor. 7:17-24, 36; 9:19-23; 10:1-22), and to exercise Christian freedom 30 with the interests of the gospel in view, especially the spiritual welfare of both 31 outsiders and weaker brethren (1 Cor. 10:23-11:1; 8:1-13). It is in this sense, 32 therefore, that Paul became “all things to all men”—“he is willing to deny himself 33 and do anything for the sake of the Gospel (sic) . . . as long as it does not violate 34 Christ’s law.”

 2 Church from the work of the Holy Spirit in making disciples.

3 4 2.1 The Holy Spirit and the Church

5 Apart from the conclusions of the Jerusalem Council, IMP proponents see in 6 Acts 15 a method of resolving theological controversy which gives controlling 7 weight to missionary field reports. Woodberry places the modern IMP proponent in 8 the shoes of Paul and Barnabas, reporting the surprising works of the Holy Spirit (e.g.
 9 reported conversions and dreams about Jesus) to an initially skeptical church. Acts 10 15 does show missionaries interacting profitably with the Church, but should the 11 claims of missionaries control the discussion, or simply contribute? To assess the 12 proper approach, one must consider the roles of the Holy Spirit, the Scriptures and 13 the Church in guiding the faith and practice of God’s people.

 15 The Scriptures are the Word of God, the product of the Holy Spirit. As God, 16 the Spirit is wholly sovereign and has the right and ability to work as he wills (John 17 3:8), convicting men of sin (John 14) and sealing redemptive truths in the heart of 18 believers (Eph. 1). Normatively, the Spirit works through the Word, effecting 19 regeneration, enabling men and women to see Jesus Christ for who he is—dead, 20 buried and resurrected for the forgiveness of their sins. John Calvin captured the 21 inseparability of the Word and the Spirit. “Therefore the Spirit, promised to us, has 22 not the task of inventing new and unheard-of revelations, or of forging a new kind of 23 doctrine, to lead us away from the received doctrine of the gospel, but of sealing our 24 minds with that very doctrine which is commended by the gospel.” As Richard 25 Gaffin puts it so well, “The Bible is the living voice of the Holy Spirit today. This is 26 the structure or pattern of working which the Spirit has set for himself in his 27 sovereign freedom.”

 29 IMP advocates on the whole hold three questionable beliefs with respect to 30 the work of the Holy Spirit. First, field reports, often interpreted through a 31 continuationist charismatic theology, seem over-eager to interpret dreams and other 32 surprising events as instances of the direct work of the Holy Spirit. This approach 33 disregards the unique historic-redemptive role of the "signs and wonders" in the book 34 of Acts to authenticate the apostolic office, an office which has ceased in the church.
 35 We surely would affirm with continuationists, IM advocates and others, that the 36 Spirit can and does act in extraordinary ways, and eagerly assert his sovereign right 37 to do so. Yet the historico-redemptively unrepeatable period that characterized the first 38 century AD frames the Holy Spirit’s work then as historically inimitable.

1 Second, these alleged works of the Spirit are taken as evidence of divine 2 approval of the IM approach overall. This seems problematic. Even when the Holy 3 Spirit is working in a person's life (or seems to be; see Matt. 7:22-23), that does not 4 automatically justify every belief and practice of that person. For instance, the true 5 conversion of an Insider does not speak one way or the other to whether the Insider 6 paradigm itself is good. Rather, God has given us the Old and New Testaments, 7 which provide the only reliable grid for assessing the Spirit's work of applying 8 redemption and building the church of Jesus Christ. In practice, IMP advocates tend 9 to give more weight to experiential reports than to the testimony of Scripture, 10 sometimes appealing to Acts 15 as supposed justification for this approach.

12 Third, the work of the Spirit as described in the Bible serves to unite God's 13 people in the body of Christ, the Church. IMPs, on the other hand, tend to promote 14 isolation of new believers from the established church, on the premises that (1) 15 sociological models of religion and culture justify excluding the Insider 16 institutionally and practically from the Church, and (2) the direct work of the Holy 17 Spirit obviates the need for believers to seek discipleship within an existing church.
18 The implications of these ideas are considered below.

21 22 2.2 The Kingdom of God and the Church

23 IMPs often make a strong distinction between "Christianity" or "the Church," 24 understood as social constructs within Western civilization, and a spiritual "Kingdom 25 of God" which includes individuals from cultures around the world, including those 26 who identify with sociologically-defined "Islam" or "Hinduism" rather than 27 "Christianity." This mingling of theological and sociological terms promotes 28 confusion which may be dispelled by considering the Biblical doctrine of the church.

30 The Westminster Standards, following Scripture (WCF 25.1, 2; see Rom. 9:6; 31 2:25-29), distinguish between the "Invisible Church" as seen by God, and the 32 "Visible Church" as seen by individual persons in the finitude of time and space.
33 Although the memberships of the Invisible Church and Visible Church overlap, 34 Scripture knows no separate category for an individual who professes membership in 35 the Invisible Church but not in the Visible Church.

37 The Church grows primarily through the bold, authoritative public preaching of 38 the Word of God (Matt. 7:28-29; Acts 9:27-28; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 19:8; Eph. 6:19-20).
39 Individuals who respond to the preached Word in faith and repentance gather into 40 distinct, local communities (churches) of professing believers and their children.

1 Their life together is ordered by the Word of God, through officers whom they have 2 chosen to serve them. Reformed confessions and teachers typically identify the 3 preaching of the gospel, the proper administration of the sacraments, and the exercise 4 of church discipline as identifying marks of a true church.
5

6 The WCF identifies the “visible church” with “the kingdom of the Lord Jesus 7 Christ” (25.2). This reign particularly concerns human beings as they are sinners, 8 redeemed by the blood of Christ, and indwelt by the Spirit of Christ. The New 9 Testament consistently directs us to the Visible Church—and to no other—as the 10 place where, in this era of redemptive history, we may behold the Kingdom of God.
11 The Visible Church and the Kingdom are distinguishable, to be sure, but they are 12 inseparable. One may not claim membership in the Kingdom without also claiming 13 membership in the Visible Church.

15 IMP proponents are reticent in using classical theological terminology and 16 categories to reflect upon the church. Explicit discussions of such ecclesiological 17 matters as an ordained ministry, the administration of the sacraments, and the 18 exercise of church discipline are rare. IMP prefer terms such as “community” or 19 “movement” rather than “church.”
20

21 Some may say that that new believers must work out the structure of 22 government, discipline, and worship in their own culturally appropriate way, 23 drawing from the Scripture, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. To propose any 24 robust exposition on these topics on our part, the argument continues, would impose 25 our culturally determined beliefs and practices on these believers. Such a rationale, 26 however, presupposes that these topics are culturally determined rather than 27 biblically legislated. Because the Scripture sets forth normative principles regulating 28 the church’s government, discipline and worship, it is not a cultural imposition to 29 encourage believers in Muslim countries to order their lives according to these 30 principles.
31

32 These preliminary observations underscore the need to understand IM 33 reflections on the Kingdom and the church on their own terms, before attempting to 34 evaluate IM claims biblically and confessionally. Three IM proponents in particular, 35 Rick Brown, Rebecca Lewis, and Kevin Higgins, have focused attention on 36 Kingdom and Church in their writings.
37

38 [See A&D 4, 5, 6, and 8]
39

2.2.1 Rick Brown

Rick Brown, translation consultant for Wycliffe/SIL, articulates sound definitions of the Church and the Kingdom of God but employs an additional category, “religion,” which includes not only non-Christian religions but also specific Christian denominations and Christian religious traditions. “Religion” promotes social conflict and struggle with other religions in order to “persuade . . . people of other religions . . . to convert to one’s own.” Instead, Brown prefers a kingdom struggle which does not seek “to promote one religious tradition over all others,” but “to advance the Kingdom of God in all social groups.” Jesus did not “condemn [Gentiles’] religious traditions and institutions but revealed to them something far better: the Kingdom of God and the surpassing grace of the King.” Brown argues that what is necessary for “spiritual growth is that people (1) belong to the invisible ecclesia of God’s Kingdom and (2) be a part of a local ecclesia of fellow members of the Kingdom.” It is not necessary that they leave “denominations” or “socioreligious groups” in order to affiliate with others. “Kingdom assemblies” need not “identify with a form of Christian religion;” rather, “the Gospel of the Kingdom” will “spread throughout [the] social networks” of which these Kingdom disciples are already part.

Brown’s distinct category of “religion” presents significant problems for his reflections on the Kingdom and the church. First, his negative definition of “religion” encompasses both Christian denominations and non-Christian religions, suggesting that Christian maturation may be stunted by the Church’s historical and substantial ecclesiological reflections upon theology, polity, or worship. On the contrary, the Scripture’s teaching on these subjects is an indispensable part of the biblical doctrine by which Christian disciples mature. Second, the New Testament does not support Brown’s contention that the Kingdom’s advancement does not entail confrontation of false religion. (John 4:22; Acts 14:15, 17:29-30, 19:21; 1 Thess. 1:9).

2.2.2 Rebecca Lewis

Rebecca Lewis critiques the allegedly Western “aggregate-church model”—the “gathering together [of] individual believers . . . into new ‘communities’ of faith.” This model, she says, is ineffective and even counterproductive in “most of the world,” where people “live in cultures that have strong family and community structures.” The model of the New Testament, rather, is the “oikos or household-based church, where families and their pre-existing relational networks become the church as the gospel spreads in their midst.” Thus, “the movement to Christ has . . . remained inside the fabric of the society and community” to “remain in and transform” those “networks” with “minimal disrupt[ion].” As the gospel infiltrated and permeated oikos-networks in Acts—Lewis cites the examples of Cornelius, Lydia, and Crispus—so also the gospel spreads today. “Jesus movements within any culture or religious structure, no matter how fallen, will be able to transform it.”

One must question her insistence, however, that these examples in Acts are meant to supply the kind of biblical norm for which Lewis pleads. Acts affords as many, if not more, examples of individuals coming to faith in Christ through the public preaching of the word by the apostles (Acts 2:41; 4:4; 8:13; 8:26; 13:12; 17:14; 17:34), without the mediating presence of the pre-existing social network that Lewis describes. Even more to the point, Acts not infrequently depicts the disrupting effects of the gospel within pre-existing social networks (e.g., Acts 13:42-52; 17:1-9; 17:10-14; 18:1-2; 19:9). Although Lewis dismisses what she terms an allegedly Western “aggregate-church model” as ineffective in non-Western settings, she does not give adequate consideration to the biblical precedents for just such an approach. Furthermore, Scripture insists that those who profess faith form a household (oikos) broader than the familial household (Gal. 6:10; Eph. 2:19; 1 Tim. 3:15; Heb. 10:21; 1 Pet. 4:17).

A more basic methodological objection may be raised against Lewis’ paradigm. Lewis has chosen one biblical metaphor for the church (‘household’), but has failed to consider and to give comparable weight to other New Testament metaphors for the church, including “flock,” “temple,” “bride,” “assembly,” “chosen people, royal priesthood, holy nation, a people belonging to God,” “vine,” “saints,” and “field.” From the standpoint of New Testament theology, to privilege the single metaphor of oikos, to the exclusion of other metaphors, appears arbitrary.

2.2.3 Kevin Higgins

Like Lewis, IMP proponent Kevin Higgins argues that “pre-existing social structures can become the church.” He allows that “the Church is made up of believers who have been saved by grace through faith.” He argues that “the Kingdom of God includes the Church, but is bigger than the Church. The Kingdom refers to the whole range of God’s exercise of His reign and rule in the universe. This includes religions.” Higgins understands the Kingdom to be broader or more extensive than the Church, including a specifically religious area in the Kingdom but outside the Church. This formulation is problematic for at least two reasons. First, while, for Higgins, the church may be a manifestation of the Kingdom, nothing in his definition requires that the church be the single place to which the New Testament directs us to behold

1 the Kingdom of God. Indeed, his definition appears to be crafted specifically 2 to avoid such an implication.
3

4 Second and more importantly, Higgins’s understanding of the 5 Kingdom cannot sustain the exclusivity of the Christian religion. He rightly 6 wishes to “reaffirm . . . that Jesus is the only way of salvation.” But how may 7 one reconcile that affirmation with his subsequent statement that, “If God is 8 active in other religions, then to at least some degree His truth can be found 9 and responded to within the context of those other religions”?

10 11 2.2.4 Six general concerns about IMP discussions of church and Kingdom

12 First, IMP proponents offer statements about the Kingdom of God 13 that may be read as antithetically relating the Kingdom and the church. J. S.
14 William favorably cites John and Anna Travis: “Jesus’ primary concern was 15 the establishment of the Kingdom of God, not the founding a new religion.” 16 If they intend to exclude the Church—its government, discipline, and 17 worship—from what they term “a new religion” it is not evident from these 18 statements. Rebecca Lewis similarly disparages "institutional forms of 19 Christianity." Other IMP proponents define the Kingdom in decidedly, even 20 exclusively, inward and invisible terms, pitting "the Kingdom" against 21 "organized religion," in what John Span calls a “problematic . . . dualism.” In 22 all situations concerning the selected terms for believers in Christ, clear and 23 conscious identification with the historic, global church should always 24 remain the goal.
25

26 [See A&D 10 and 11]
27

28 Second, IMP proponents Travis and Woodberry plead for a Kingdom 29 whose unity is invisible and Spiritual but does not necessarily have 30 ecclesiastical dimensions. Similarly, the intentional, physical observation of 31 baptism and the Lord's Supper is omitted in some Insider communities.
32

33 Third, this discomfort with church, form, and order within IMP 34 literature accompanies an emphasis on the secret, inward, leaven-like spread 35 of the Kingdom through pre-existing social networks, until the totality of the 36 network or culture has been influenced and captured by the gospel. IMP 37 paradigms do not give public preaching of God's Word the primacy 38 warranted by Scripture. This is a startling omission given the way in which 39 Jesus' words and deeds identified preaching as the primary means by which 40 the Kingdom would expand (Matt 4:23; 10:5-15, 28:18-20; Mark 4:1-20; 41 John 20:19-23; similarly in Acts and the Epistles).
42

1 Fourth, by de-emphasizing preaching of the Word, formal church
 2 disciplinary structure, and administration of the sacraments, IMP 3 understandings of the church risk stunting the growth and maturity of real 4 believers present in these “Jesus-based communities.”

5
 6 Fifth, IMP understandings of the church place outsiders in a particular 7 quandary with respect to identifying the “Jesus-based communities” in question.
 8 On what basis might we recognize these bodies as churches, particularly in 9 the absence of the marks of true churches mentioned just above?

 11 Sixth, IM understandings of the church fail to evidence serious 12 interaction with historical Christian reflection on the doctrine of the church 13 and, back of that, the biblical testimony to the church. Discussions of such 14 basic or fundamental matters as the marks of the church, the invisible and 15 visible church, and the means of grace require considerably more attention 16 than IMP proponents have generally afforded in their writings.

 18 Conclusion

19 20 Common IMPs promote inadequate views of the natures and roles of the church and 21 the Kingdom of God, the relationships between identity, religion and culture, and the 22 relative roles of anthropology of Scripture in forming a missionary worldview. Samuel 23 Zwemer urged a more biblically discerning approach: “We must become Moslems to the 24 Moslem if we would gain them for Christ. We must do this in the Pauline sense, without 25 compromise, but with self-sacrificing sympathy and unselfish love.” Such statements by 26 Zwemer have been frequently misunderstood and misapplied, leading to a blurring of culture 27 and religion, and to indiscretion in apologetic and missionary methods.

28
 29 But the abuses on one side (degrees of syncretism) have often been met with 30 countering abuses—misunderstanding, fear, and apathy. Just as success in Muslim missions 31 will not occur by syncretism, it will never occur by ignorance and apathy. Only by the 32 obedient pursuit of the millions of people blinded by untruth of Islam, who desperately need 33 the grace and forgiveness of Jesus Christ, the Son of the living God, will such people enter 34 into the promises of God’s covenant of grace in Jesus Christ. Accordingly, to every Muslim 35 inquirer, Zwemer urges us to present Christ according to Scripture and, trusting the Spirit of 36 God working mightily through Word of God, to lead the inquirer to consider the person and 37 work of Jesus. His approach is as simple as it is compelling: “We should press home the 38 question Jesus Christ put to His disciples and to the world, ‘What think ye of the Christ?’”

39
 40 The Muslim world needs the gospel. We must deliver that pure gospel and deliver it 41 faithfully. May the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ enable us to that end.

Section B. The Declarations: Affirmations and Denials

Why Affirmations and Denials?

Man's chief end is to glorify God and enjoy Him forever (WSC 1). Christian disciple making, including evangelism, is a necessary prerequisite both to that end and to living an abundant life in Christ.

All people, including Muslims, stand in need of the salvation that comes exclusively through Christ. While evangelism is not the sum total of the purpose of the Church—"Evangelism exists because worship doesn't,"² the Church is indeed called to faithful biblical witness and must not live in isolation from the world. As has been oft expressed, followers of Jesus Christ are to live in the world but not of it. Disciple-making in any context requires engagement with unbelief and unbelievers, and the Church of Jesus Christ must remain committed to the task entrusted to it—knowing Jesus Christ and making Him known.

The twenty-first century is a compelling and dynamic time in which to live. There is an urgent need for Christian resources directed toward the 1.6 billion Muslims currently living around the world. Yet the recent history of East/West relations has generated a fear of Muslims in some quarters, which discourages Christian witness. Despite this, the underlying issues in Muslim evangelism are similar to those in other settings.³ Because many Muslims live without a church in their community to stand as a local witness, the need for cross-cultural witness is great, though the increasing presence of Muslims in Western countries also presents an opportunity for western Christians to engage in direct personal witness in their own contexts.

As a means of expressing faithful witness to the Muslim world and as a means of addressing the biblical, theological, and methodological issues raised by IM, the SCIM presents these Affirmations and Denials (A's & D's). These A's & D's provide principles. Because IM thinking and methods are broad and varied, the only practical way to engage IM scope in a biblically faithful manner is to present categorical statements as a means of application to the varied settings. Each of the A's & D's has in view particular theological and/or methodological issues associated with the broad range of missiological questions under the IM umbrella.

² John Piper, Let the Nations Be Glad! The Supremacy of God in Missions (Grand Rapids: Baker, 2003), p. 17.

³ Thabiti Anyabwile, The Gospel for Muslims: An Encouragement to Share Christ with Confidence (Chicago: Moody, 2010), pp. 13-15.

1 It is imperative that the reader of these A's & D's employ them properly. None of the 2 A's & D's exists in isolation from the others. This means that none of the A's & D's should 3 ever be treated atomistically. To apply one set of A's & D's without a view to the clarifying 4 role of the other A's & D's is to misapply them and to risk drawing faulty conclusions. The 5 SCIM therefore urges the reader and practitioner to view these A's & D's holistically, 6 synthetically, and in a fashion that honors their cross-pollinating intention. To isolate an A 7 & D is to misunderstand and misappropriate it. To implement an A & D with self-conscious 8 attention to the other A's & D's that clarify and qualify it is to honor the intention of this 9 report.

 11 Coordinately, the SCIM recognizes that, due to the broad scope of issues raised by 12 IM, this set of A's & D's will not answer every methodological question. However, properly 13 understood, these Affirmations and Denials do provide vital principles for addressing other 14 features of IM (and even the thinking of the emergent church movement), which are not 15 named explicitly. With a goal to biblical faithfulness in thought and method in the task of 16 missions worldwide, the SCIM presents these A's & D's with the express desire that the 17 lordship of Jesus Christ, the Head of the Church, receive the full honor, glory, and blessing 18 due him. Missions belongs to Jesus Christ, and is to be carried out under the comprehensive 19 implications of his resurrected status as Son of God in power (Rom. 1:1-7; Mt 28:18-20).

 21 The following A's & D's seek to encourage faithful pioneering in gospel ministry 22 throughout Muslim contexts. Because Jesus Christ is head of his Church and came to give 23 his life for her, the Great Commission cannot be fulfilled apart from the planting of local 24 churches, each of which is to be a faithful expression of the Church universal. The SCIM 25 thus submits these A's and D's with the express desire of bearing faithful witness to Jesus 26 Christ to Muslims around the world. "Let the peoples praise you, O God; let all the peoples 27 praise you! Let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for you judge the peoples with equity 28 and guide the nations upon earth. Let the peoples praise you, O God; let all the peoples 29 praise you!" (Psa. 67:3-5)

30 31 Biblical Interpretation and Redemptive History

32
 33 1a) We affirm that Scripture reveals, describes, and explains the meaning of the redemptive 34 work of God in history, centering in and accomplished by Jesus Christ, and provides 35 authoritative practical instruction and models for missions.

 37 1b) We deny that Scripture presents these authoritative missions principles without 38 comprehensive attention to the once-for-all, inimitable, and substitutionary work of God in

1 Christ Jesus and the historically, theologically, and eschatologically unique factors which 2 dominate the first century AD.

4 1c) We deny that the Christian and Muslim context of faith, religion, and culture today 5 replicates⁴ the historical, cultural, and theological situation characterizing Jews and Gentiles 6 in the first century.

7 8 Rationale: See “Hermeneutics and Exegesis” in Attachment 1: CR 2013 (Revised)

9 10 Scripture, Social Sciences, Cultural Anthropology

11 12 2a) We affirm that the Bible is the ultimate authority of mankind to which all human 13 disciplines, such as anthropology and other social sciences, must be subject.

15 2b) We deny that the Bible’s norming role obviates the need for diligent study of human 16 circumstances, such as the details of Islam and its people.

18 3a) We affirm that God has gifted the church with many tools, such as social science, which 19 aid in understanding societies and human relationships.

21 3b) We deny that any tool should supplant the Bible, either explicitly or functionally, as the 22 determinative authority for defining human relationships.

24 Rationale: See “God, His Revelation, and Human Reply” in Attachment 1: CR 2013 25 (Revised)

26 27 Missions and Ecclesiology

28
29 4a) We affirm that the church of Jesus Christ is one body, holy, catholic, and apostolic, and 30 that a local expression of the biblical church exists where the true marks of the church are 31 present.

33 4b) We deny that a biblical church exists where any of these marks, which manifest the vital 34 connection to the universal church, are absent.

⁴ There are indeed parallels between the two situations, but they are not exactly analogous. Any consideration of parallels must wholly yield to the unique redemptive historical factors which govern the interpretation of the biblical text.

1 4c) We deny any possibility of salvation outside of a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ, who 2 is the Head of the church.⁵

3
4 5a) We affirm that the visible church⁶ is the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ (WCF 25:2).

5
6 5b) We deny that membership in the kingdom allows one to intentionally and permanently 7 disassociate from the visible church.

8
9 6a) We affirm that the local church is part of and should understand itself to be part of the 10 global church.

12 6b) We deny that any local church may think of itself as unrelated to or unconnected with 13 fellow believers in the global church.

15 Rationale: See “The Scripture's Teaching on the Church,” particularly concerning the 16 confessional meaning of "the visible church" in Attachment 1: CR 2013 (Revised)

17 18 The Holy Spirit, Scripture, and the Church

19
20 7a) We affirm that the Holy Spirit always works in accordance with the Scripture, and may 21 work in persons outside the personal reach of the visible church, bringing them to a saving 22 knowledge of Christ.

24 7b) We deny that such works of the Holy Spirit ever occur without a view to participation in 25 the visible church or that such works ever render unnecessary the regular, vital, and personal 26 connection with the visible church.

28 8a) We affirm that throughout history the Holy Spirit has led the global church into 29 understanding the truth of Scripture. This leading into truth is evident in the historic creeds 30 and confessions of the church by which the church has affirmed biblical truth and denied 31 error, and facilitates diverse yet unifying expressions of biblically faithful worship in 32 individual contexts.

⁵ WLC 60 states, “They who, having never heard the gospel, know not Jesus Christ, and believe not in him, cannot be saved, be they never so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature, or the laws of that religion which they profess; neither is there salvation in any other, but in Christ alone, who is the Savior only of his body the church.” Cf. WCF 10:3.

⁶ For the distinction between the visible and invisible church, see WLC 60-65. This distinction stands apart from the issue of “underground” churches in persecuted areas, which are still part of the visible church as defined in the WLC.

1 8b) We deny that the historical church’s creeds, doctrinal formulations, and biblically-2 grounded practices reflect enculturation in a way that renders them an obstacle for the 3 extension and building of the church in Muslim contexts, and their own work of theology.
4

5 9a) We affirm that the Holy Spirit, working according to the Holy Scriptures, illumines 6 believers who faithfully partake of the biblically expressed means of grace (the Word of 7 God, sacraments, and prayer) in their growing sanctification.
8

9 9b) We deny that this work of the Holy Spirit obviates the role of the church and 10 particularly its teaching office in the ongoing discipleship of believers.

12 Rationale: See “The Ministry of the Holy Spirit” in Attachment 1: CR 2013 (Revised) 13

14 In Christ Identity and Discipleship 15

16 10a) We affirm that the biblical label “Christian” has great historical significance and 17 generally should be pursued and accepted in order to manifest a universal and consistent 18 witness for Christ.

20 10b) We deny that “Christian” is a mandatory label for followers of Christ in all times and 21 places, since contexts exist where the term has been corrupted by associations foreign to its 22 biblical and historic usage.

24 10c) We affirm that persistent effort should be made by all believers everywhere to 25 understand and teach the term “Christian” and similar terms in ways that extricate them 26 from any faulty associations and fills them with their biblically-informed, historic meanings.

28 11a) We affirm that a new believer’s grasp of his new unique and covenantal identity in 29 Christ and of the implications of his new allegiance to Christ is an ongoing process of 30 growth and maturity; and that the articulation of this identity is subject to refinement in 31 keeping with Scripture even across generations of believers.

33 11b) We deny that a believer prior to Christ’s return ever reaches a terminal point where his 34 sense of identity and his understanding of his allegiance to Christ is no longer subject to this 35 process of refinement.

37 12a) We affirm that true conversion to Jesus Christ involves a radical change of mind and 38 heart, though discipleship is a Spirit-wrought process of growing in grace and truth.

1 12b) We affirm that Christ ordinarily calls each believer to serve him in the context of 2 family, birth community, and vocation.

4 12c) We deny that individuals may disregard Scripture’s teaching about idolatry of heart 5 and practice, may misrepresent or compromise their new allegiance to Christ, or in any other 6 way may dissimulate or disobey biblical teaching, in order to remain in their social context.

7

10 13a) We affirm that the gospel can spread through pre-existing social networks, so that 11 believers faithfully live out their commitment to Christ and conform their lives to will of 12 God as revealed in Scripture, with the goal of presenting Jesus Christ to their communities.

14 13b) We deny that believers must adopt particular patterns of behavior beyond those 15 explicitly or by good and necessary consequence mandated by Scripture.

17 Rationale: See “Identity and 1 Corinthians” in Attachment 1: CR 2013 (Revised)

18

19 14a) We affirm that mature believers ought to perform a servant role in assisting younger 20 believers to understand and apply Scripture in living out their new faith.

22 14b) We deny that this role absolves the younger believer of his own moral responsibility to 23 understand and apply Scripture.

25 Rationale: See “Identity and 1 Corinthians,” and “Conclusion: The Advance of the 26 Gospel” in Attachment 1: CR 2013 (Revised)

Section C. Analysis of Minority Report 2014

NOTE: The Analysis of Minority Report 2014 interacts with the latest version of Minority Report 2014 that was made available to the committee. The final version of Minority Report 2014 made minor changes of wording and style to the version in the committee’s possession. In the judgment of the authors of the Minority Report, these changes do not touch on matters of substance. We, the committee, therefore present this Analysis of Minority Report 2014 as a faithful interaction with the contents of Minority Report 2014.”

ABBREVIATIONS IN SECTION C

CMB Christians of Muslim Background (cf. MBB, Muslim Background Believers). The SCIM has chosen CMB rather than MBB because numerous Muslim converts to Christ prefer CMB to MBB. The groups referenced by the phrases are identical. When quoting other documents that use ‘MBB’ we have retained it to maintain accuracy.”

CR 2014 Committee Report 2014

MR 2014 Minority Report 2014

MR 2013 Minority Report 2013

INTRODUCTION

TE Nabeel Jabbour and RE Tom Seelinger have submitted to the 42nd General Assembly a Minority Report (MR 2014). Like the Minority Report submitted to the 41st General Assembly (MR 2013), MR 2014 intends to be supplementary. The committee lauds this intent of MR 2014. It also recognizes that MR 2014 represents a sincere effort to improve and to refine MR 2013.

The committee, however, is not prepared to agree with MR 2014’s self-designation as supplementary to CR 2014. It has two leading reservations about MR 2014. First, in critical areas where MR 2014 claims to supplement CR 2014, MR 2014 is unclear and ambiguous. MR 2014 dilutes the clarity and incisiveness of CR 2014. Second and relatedly, in those areas where MR 2014 demonstrates lack of clarity and ambiguity, it is subject to friendly appropriation by IM proponents. And it is precisely in these areas that CR 2014 has raised significant concerns about IM methods and practices. In this respect, MR 2014 works at cross-purposes with CR 2014 in attempting to provide a biblical and confessional analysis of Insider Movements (IM). These two concerns surface together in three areas: MR 2014’s discussion of identity, its discussion of the church, and its exegesis of Scripture.

1. MR 2014 and Identity

MR 2014 claims to build upon and supplement CR 2014’s discussion of identity. In fact, MR 2014’s discussion of identity lacks clarity and precision, and it is this very lack of

1 clarity and precision that lends MR 2014 to friendly appropriation by IM proponents. MR 2014
2 notes the difficulties inherent in defining Muslim identity, owing partly to the fragmented 3 character of many Muslim societies. Such fragmentation allows Christians of Muslim 4 Background (CMBs) to follow Christ faithfully within “Muslim society.” MR 2014 rejects 5 the idea of a “voluntary, indefinite retention of Islamic religious identity.” It is unclear, however, 6 what an “Islamic religious identity” is. It is furthermore unclear why MR 2014 limits its 7 prohibition to “indefinite” retention of this identity. Neither is it evident that MR 2014 means 8 to proscribe definite retention of this identity, whatever MR 2014 intends by this “identity.” 9

10 MR 2014 laudably urges CMBs to “remain connected to family and friends” and is 11 aware of the danger of “syncretism” that such CMBs face. MR 2014 urges CMBs to pursue 12 discipleship “in the birth communities but not inside the Islamic institutions,” particularly 13 mosques. At the same time, MR 2014 notes that “transition from the Islamic institutions” 14 may be a “process that could take time.” Such a CMB could in no case “retain false Islamic 15 belief.” He must change “theologically” even while he remains connected to his family and 16 friends “socially and relationally” (emphasis original).

18 These statements raise more questions than they answer. May “birth communities” 19 and “Islamic institutions” be as neatly separated as MR 2014 suggests? In a Muslim context, 20 is MR 2014’s distinction drawn between inner, personal theological change and external 21 socio-relational ties as firm and as clear as MR 2014 suggests? MR 2014’s own unanswered 22 “key questions” suggest not, and the testimony of many CMBs and Muslims themselves 23 firmly indicates not. Furthermore, in saying that a “transition from the Islamic institutions” 24 may take time, how much time is envisioned? One could easily see IM proponents appealing 25 to these distinctions and formulations to warrant or permit unbiblical engagement with 26 Muslim culture. As the preponderance of IM literature evidences, IM approaches capitalize 27 on such ambiguity concerning identity and transitions. With its lack of clarity about the 28 meaning of key terms, MR 2014 actually aligns itself with the very IM paradigm which CR 29 2014 critiques.
30

31 MR 2014 demonstrates three such affinities with the IM paradigm that CR 2014 32 critiques. First, MR 2014 leaves the impression that the CMB is the chief architect of his 33 own identity. Absent from MR 2014 is any discussion how the historic, visible church and 34 the creeds and confessions of the visible church play any meaningful role in shaping the 35 identity of the CMB. Second, MR 2014 overwhelmingly discusses identity in terms of the 36 interior, psychological life of the individual – how the individual thinks of himself. Absent 37 is a corresponding emphasis in discussing how Christian identity determines the way in 38 which one conducts himself with integrity in his family and within Muslim society. This 39 individualistic approach to identity flatly contradicts the CIP (Covenant Identity Paradigm) 40 of CR 2014. Third, MR 2014 provides no mechanism for deciding whether one may call 41 himself or a Muslim or call himself a Christian. It remains open to the possibility that a 42 CMB may legitimately identify himself both as a Muslim and as a Christian.

1 2. MR 2014 and the Church
2

3 MR 2014 lacks clarity and precision in its discussion of the church. It does so in part 4 by introducing categories and distinctions that are neither adequately defined nor biblically 5 justified. This lack of clarity and precision lends its discussion to friendly appropriation by 6 IM proponents. Note the following four examples.

8 First, MR 2014 proposes a taxonomy of churches (“obvious,” “hidden,” and “semi-9 hidden”) that is neither clearly articulated nor expressly grounded in Scripture or in the 10 Westminster Standards. MR 2014 mistakenly believes that CR 2013 (and CR 2014) lend 11 support to what MR 2014 terms the “hidden” or “semi-hidden” church.
12

13 Second, MR 2014 shows awareness of some of the ways in which Reformed 14 confessions have spoken of the marks of the church. But MR 2014 proceeds to discuss what 15 it alternately labels “essentials,” “aspir[at]ions,” or “standards,” and does so without any 16 clear connection with its discussion of the marks of the church. These seven “essentials” are, 17 furthermore, so broad that they could easily define societies of believers other than 18 congregations of the visible church. It is these “essentials” that functionally determine the 19 way in which MR 2014 thinks of the visible church.

21 Third, MR 2014’s efforts to explain the phrase of WCF 25.2 (“out of [the visible 22 church] there is no ordinary possibility of salvation”) leave the reader uncertain what MR 23 2014’s views are with respect to this phrase. It certainly is clear in cautioning against what is 24 alleged to be a “formal or exclusive ecclesiasticism.” It suggests that the CMB need not 25 pursue membership in an existing historic church in the locale where he resides. It 26 furthermore mistakenly believes that a “credible profession of faith” is to be identified with 27 an individual’s sincere and heart-felt conviction that he believes in Jesus. Neither of these 28 two views, however, finds any support in the material that MR 2014 cites from the WCF, 29 Macpherson, or Hodge.

31 Fourth, MR 2014 furthermore notes that baptism “should be done, but at the right 32 time and for the right reasons (WCF 28.5, 7).” MR 2014, however, offers no explanation of 33 what it means by the qualification “at the right time and for the right reasons.” It raises but 34 does not answer the question whether baptism, for circumstantial reasons, may be 35 indefinitely delayed. The references to WCF 28.5, 7 offer no support for these contentions in 36 MR 2014 concerning baptism.
37

38 These statements about the church could readily be appropriated by an IM proponent 39 to justify IM methods and practices touching upon the CMB’s relation to the visible church.
40 As the preponderance of IM literature evidences, IM approaches do in fact capitalize on 1 such ambiguity concerning the doctrines of the church and its sacraments. With its 2 qualifications and ambiguous statements, MR 2014 actually aligns itself with the very IM 3 paradigm which CR 2014 critiques.

4
 5 One particular area where MR 2014 demonstrates affinity with IM approaches is MR 6 2014's posture toward existing churches in Muslim nations. To be sure, MR 2014 addresses 7 legitimate concerns with respect to existing churches in the Muslim world. Historic 8 churches, having experienced centuries of persecution by Islam, particularly in the Middle 9 East and Pakistan, are at times unwelcoming of Muslim inquirers. In addressing those 10 concerns, however, MR 2014 fails to acknowledge any positive and constructive role for 11 those existing churches in the Muslim world. When MR 2014 does speak of historic, 12 national churches, it frequently does so in ways that are prejudicial to those particular 13 churches. More significantly, it ignores the rapid emergence and presence of CMB churches 14 in the Muslim world. MR 2014 leaves readers with the impression that only two options 15 exist: a "second class" existence within an historic church or what MR 2014 terms "hidden" 16 or "semi-hidden" churches. That these are the only two options is factually incorrect.

 18 MR 2014 expresses a clear and decided preference for what are called "hidden" or 19 "semi-hidden" churches. In company with IM writings, MR 2014 claims that these bodies 20 are better poised than historic, national churches to leaven Muslim society with the gospel – 21 "like yeast spreading through dough" (likely the most common metaphor employed by IM 22 writings concerning the growth of insider movements). Also in company with IM writings, 23 MR 2014 offers no clear criteria by which these bodies are to be defined and recognized as 24 Christian churches. Neither is attention given to the possibility, much less the desirability, 25 of these bodies entering into either formal or informal ecclesiastical fellowship with existing 26 churches. For all intents and purposes, these bodies appear not only autonomous by design 27 but also independent of the accountability and oversight of the broader church.

28 29 3. MR 2014 and the Exegesis of Scripture

 31 MR 2014 offers extended readings of Acts 15, 1 Cor. 7, and 1 Cor. 10. In company 32 with IM readings of these texts, MR 2014 understands these texts in primarily sociological 33 terms. That is to say, MR 2014's readings of these passages mute the primary redemptive-34 historical, epochal interest of these passages. They understand these passages primarily in 35 terms of the gospel's intersection with socio-cultural practices generally. The committee 36 surely does not disagree that these texts apply to cross-cultural missions, not least in Muslim 37 contexts. In fact, it is CR 2014's exegesis of these passages that provides the proper 38 framework for cross-cultural missions. The committee does disagree that first century 39 Judaism and contemporary Islamic practice are as closely and as analogously related as MR

1 2014 claims. The committee is concerned that such readings are subject to friendly
2 appropriation by proponents of IM practices and methods. A comparison of CR 2014’s 3 survey of IM readings of these texts with MR 2014’s readings of these texts will 4 demonstrate a striking similarity in both the ways in which these texts are read and in the 5 conclusions that their readings yield. As the preponderance of IM literature evidences, IM 6 approaches in overt and subtle ways capitalize on such a culturally hegemonic hermeneutic.
7 With its affinities to this hermeneutical approach, MR 2014 actually aligns itself with the 8 very IM paradigm which CR 2014 critiques.

12 In the areas that MR 2014 claims to supplement CR 2014, MR 2014 is frequently 13 ambiguous and unclear. One casualty of MR 2014’s ambiguity and lack of clarity is that, 14 while claiming to address the “realities on the ground,” MR 2014 actually fails to provide 15 clear, concrete, practical counsel to CMBs. It fails in any discernible way to distinguish the 16 descriptive (what is) from the prescriptive (what Scripture says ought to be). Unlike CR 17 2014, MR 2014 provides readers with insufficient tools to answer important, practical 18 questions. It also introduces ideas incompatible with CR 2014 - ideas that profoundly shape 19 the way in which one would answer numerous, practical questions. Such questions include 20 the following –

- 21
- 22 • Should Muslims who claim Christ as Savior and Lord remain within Islam and refer
- 23 to themselves as Muslims?
- 24 • How should believers living in Muslim areas distinguish themselves from Islam?
- 25 • Can “cultural” Muslims be separated from Islam?
- 26 • Should followers of Christ choose to associate with the visible church upon the
- 27 condition of secrecy?
- 28 • Can Islam and its associated structures and practices be reformed from the inside as
- 29 “yeast in the dough”?
- 30 • Can one follow Christ faithfully and maintain a Muslim identity with integrity?
- 31 • Which is more important – following Christ and associating with his visible church
- 32 openly or maintaining a dual religious identity so as to keep channels of witness
- 33 open?
- 34

35 MR 2014 lacks both the biblical and conceptual clarity to enable a CMB to answer 36 these questions satisfactorily. In the way that MR 2014 attempts to do so, it is amenable to 37 friendly appropriation by IM proponents. By way of contrast, CR 2014 provides clear 38 biblical and confessional categories and principles that equip Christian workers and CMBs 39 to answer these questions on a firm, biblical basis and with practical concreteness.

Attachment 1: Committee Report 2013 (Revised)

IMPORTANT NOTE:

This attachment (CR 2013 Revised) is an amended version of the full committee report submitted to the 41st General Assembly in June 2013. The content, argumentation and structure of the report remain unchanged, but there are minor changes to wording, and a few grammatical, citation, and spelling corrections.

For clarity and organization, the following parts have been moved to the main body of the 2014 Committee Report to GA:

- Overture 9 (2011)
- 2013 Preface (expanded for 2014)
- Declarations (Affirmations and Denials –expanded and updated for 2014))
- Recommendations to GA (revised for 2014)

2 EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

4 Christian missionaries seeking gospel progress regularly explore innovative tactics
5 for expressing the gospel in various cultural settings. In addition to the life-changing effects 6 of the transition “from darkness to light,” converts also face pressures, from a variety of 7 sources, to reorder their habits in some ways that exceed the demands of Scripture. These 8 pressures, which pose an unnecessary obstacle to evangelism, can include wardrobe, speech 9 patterns, physical appearance, social ties, daily habits, and more. Missionaries have long 10 discussed ways to sharpen gospel focus to avoid these obstacles, and throughout the 11 twentieth century, anthropology came to play a more and more prominent role in this and 12 other missiological discussions, with a comparative de-emphasis on the role of theology, one 13 example of a general move toward the compartmentalization of specialties across-the-board 14 in seminary training. Scholars such as Samuel Zwemer, J.H. Bavinck, and Harvie Conn 15 figured strongly in Reformed missiology, calling the Church to explore mission through the 16 lens of Scripture.

18 In some areas of the world, groups have arisen which study the Bible and identify 19 with Jesus, while continuing also to identify as members of their birth religion—Muslim, 20 Hindu, and so on. These individuals can avoid the excommunication from their families and 21 communities which has often occurred when individuals begin to identify as “Christian,” 22 especially in societies in which terms such as “Christian” have acquired a spectrum of 23 unchristian implications. Awareness of these groups, dubbed “Insider Movements” (IMs) by 24 Western missiologists, has led some to conclude that certain elements of historical Western 25 missionary emphasis fall into the “unnecessary obstacle” category rather than being essential 26 for either evangelism or the discipling of a mature church. The debated elements have 27 included identification as “Christian” and rejection of other religious labels such as 28 “Muslim” or “Hindu.” These western analyses of Insider Movement paradigms have been 29 promoted through articles in missiology periodicals (e.g. International Journal of Frontier 30 Missions; Mission Frontiers) and conferences (e.g. the Common Ground series).

32 Scripture authoritatively speaks to all peoples, all cultures, and all contexts. As the 33 Word of God, biblical revelation must shape the way in which we think about all matters, 34 including missiology. IM advocates do appeal to Scripture, and seek to employ biblical 35 passages and themes in defense of their missiological analyses. It is imperative, however, to 36 assess IM paradigms based upon a refreshed consideration of functional biblical authority, 37 the precedent of Scripture’s own self-interpretation (WCF 1.9), and the systematized 38 teaching of Scripture as expressed in such documents as the Westminster Standards.

1 Missiologists defending Insider Movement paradigms often appeal to the Jerusalem
 2 Council (Acts 15) as an example of the Church's need to adapt its theology based on field 3 reports. Though the field reports surely played a significant subordinate role in Acts 15 as 4 they should in missiology today, treatments of such passages must recognize the sui generis 5 features of the first century, along with the associated points of discontinuity between the 6 first century and the twenty-first century. The Christ-centered work of the Holy Spirit in the 7 early church, in fulfillment of the prophecies of the Old Testament, underscores the 8 historically unique character of the events in Acts. Contemporary analogy between the 9 biblical and contemporary contexts surely exists, but it will flow properly only when the 10 theological, eschatological, and redemptive-historical uniqueness of Acts gains proper 11 interpretive traction. Ensuring this hermeneutical care is as difficult as it is important.
 12 Sociology and cultural anthropology have at points influenced IM advocates to interpret 13 features of the biblical record as culturally relative, rather than in their fuller biblical context 14 of promise/fulfillment. The fulfillment of the Abrahamic promise in Jesus Christ makes the 15 central feature of Jew/Gentile relations a matter of redemptive historical/ecclesiological 16 realization not cultural diversity.

 18 Acts 15 is also alleged by Insider paradigm proponents to demonstrate that just as 19 Gentile believers in Jesus were not expected to convert to Judaism, so also Muslims who 20 come to faith in Jesus should not be expected to identify as Christian, but may continue to 21 identify as something like, "Muslim followers of Jesus." As with the issue of field reports, 22 this interpretation of Acts 15 overgeneralizes the unique circumstances of the New Covenant 23 transition from a Church centered in Judaism to a Church among the nations. While Gentile 24 believers were not required to adopt Jewish practices, neither were they exhorted to continue 25 in their previous religious practices and identification. Rather, Scripture provides numerous 26 examples of Christians necessarily coming into intractable ideological conflict with pagan 27 religion in Samaria, Athens, Ephesus, Thessalonica, and elsewhere.

28
 29 IM paradigms emphasize the diversity of peoples and cultures, and seek to appreciate 30 the richness of cultural multiformity, with 1 Corinthians 7-10 in particular seen as endorsing 31 continued participation in one's previous "socio-religious culture." Prevalent within IM 32 publications is treatment of various types of self-identity, familial identity, social identity, 33 and religious identity. All questions of identity, however, must begin with the biblical 34 revelation, which exposes a bi-covenantal paradigm. All mankind is either in Adam or in 35 Christ, the respective covenant heads of humanity. Actual identity and the sense of identity 36 must give this covenant identity paradigm (CIP) categorical and functional prominence. In 37 consideration of these identity questions, the diverse expressions of faith and practice raise 38 biblical questions about the nature of the church, its worship, and the practice of the means 39 of grace such as the preaching of the Word, the sacraments, and prayer.

1 Christ-followers around the world should understand and describe themselves first 2 and foremost as followers of Jesus Christ, and therefore members of the Visible Church, the 3 body of Christ. Even “hidden Christians” in persecuted circumstances are still part of the 4 Visible Church as defined in the Westminster Standards. This Church comprises a 5 Mediatorial body constituted by God himself, with Christ as its head, growing through the 6 ordinary means of grace appointed by God. Biblical preaching calls its audience to respond 7 in faith and repentance concerning the atoning death and life-giving resurrection of Jesus 8 Christ. True churches are marked by biblical preaching, right administration of the 9 sacraments, and proper administration of discipline. These functions assume a duly 10 constituted church government, organized appropriately according to the size and 11 circumstances of the local church.

13 The “kingdom circle” model of the Kingdom of God in many IM paradigms 14 envisions a body of biblically faithful persons composed variously of Christians who follow 15 Jesus, Muslims who follow Jesus, Buddhists who follow Jesus, and so on. In this 16 interpretive approach, soteriological, ecclesiological and heuristic problems mushroom. The 17 model obfuscates the close scriptural connection between the Kingdom of God and the 18 Church, downplaying the distinctions between Christianity, Islam, and other religions, 19 particularly the strong historic association between Christianity and the Church. This de-20 emphasis on institutions, religion, and the role of the Church in Christ’s plan for his people 21 has affinity with themes in writings associated with the Emergent Church, though Insider 22 paradigm proponents rarely reference Emergent writers directly. Missionaries may properly 23 recognize situations in which specific terms (e.g. Christian, Church, or their common 24 equivalents in other languages) may be misunderstood and thus unhelpful, but the concepts 25 represented by those terms should nonetheless be preserved as a part of biblical discipleship.

27 Some Insider paradigm authors appeal to biblical accounts of oikos (household) 28 conversions (e.g. the families of Lydia and Cornelius in the book of Acts) as justification for 29 avoiding the gathering of Christ-followers into allegedly artificial “aggregate churches” 30 distinct from the pre-existing familial or social network (e.g., birth community, religious 31 community). But the New Testament concept of “the household of God” envisions a 32 fellowship which crosses not only family boundaries but also social strata and racial lines.
33 One may acknowledge that Christian fellowships began in individual households without 34 assuming that they persisted in that state either indefinitely or exclusively, as some IM 35 proponents claim.

37 The concerns raised above are not with the ideas or practices of immature believers 38 and fellowships in Muslim or other contexts; one expects understanding of complex issues 39 of self, society and faith to come gradually, even over the course of generations, through 40 biblical study and practice illumined by the Holy Spirit. Such proper understanding also

1 requires that the mature church engage with new believers and new movements in such a 2 way that upholds biblical integrity, the universality of the church in faith and practice, and in 3 a way that also appreciates the biblically informed diversity of the people of God.
4 Missionaries must humbly pray, study, preach, teach, and engage new believers ("Insider" or 5 otherwise) in ways that encourage them toward greater biblical, Christ-honoring fidelity.

7 At stake are the underlying assumptions guiding missionary evaluations, particularly 8 in the areas of hermeneutics, ecclesiology, and covenant identity. Sub-biblical understanding 9 in any of these areas will skew interpretation of field data as well as recommendations for 10 the proper course of missionary action. Deeper biblical and theological reflection on these 11 areas must therefore precede and shape field analysis.

13 These circumstances suggest an important direction for multidisciplinary scholarship 14 bringing missiologists, anthropologists, and theologians into the "trialogue" previously 15 propounded by Harvie Conn. Such inter-disciplinary considerations, however, must operate 16 in such a way that Scripture and its good and necessary consequential teaching function 17 authoritatively in all missiological analysis and method. A host of related questions 18 concerning specific practices and beliefs can then be given individual attention. In the 19 meantime, missionaries should encourage Insiders toward ever-increasing biblical fidelity, 20 and churches should ensure that their supported missionaries approach these issues from 21 biblical presuppositions.

22

1 PREAMBLE: The Command To Go

2
3 What more glorious experience of corporate worship is described in the Scriptures 4 than the following verses from chapter 7 of the Apostle John’s Book of Revelation?
5

6 After this I looked, and behold, a great multitude that no one could number, 7 from every nation, from all tribes and peoples and languages, standing before 8 the throne and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, with palm branches 9 in their hands, and crying out with a loud voice, “Salvation belongs to our 10 God who sits on the throne, and to the Lamb!” (Revelation 7:9-10)¹ 11

12 God’s people find this celebration glorious on account of both the numbers of people 13 involved and the rich diversity of that assembly. By the blood of Christ, people from every 14 tribe, language, people and nation are present, all of them purchased for God. This diversity 15 does not simply and sentimentally affirm the harmony among men who ought to be able to 16 get along with one another. Rather, God wills that the heavenly realms will resound in 17 unified praise to God by the body of Christ from every tribe, language, people and nation.
18 In Christ, human differences, which now appear to contribute to so much discord and sin, 19 will be not homogenized, but completely purified and perfected from their fallen 20 expressions. Elements in our present lives that seem so prone to division and discord must 21 be seen before the light of God’s redeeming plan. These differences ultimately will neither 22 obstruct nor diminish witness to God’s glory, but rather increase it—not only on earth but 23 throughout the heavenly realms.
24

25 The Church² in missions strives not to become one in the sense of sameness; rather it 26 encourages every tribe, language, people and nation to take its rightful, distinct and full 27 place in the worship of the ages. Contrary to opinion in some circles, “It is simply not true 28 that the Reformation had nothing or little to do with mission.”³ The Westminster Directory 29 for Public Worship (1645) exhorts ministers of the gospel “to pray for the propagation of the 30 gospel and kingdom of Christ to all nations; for the conversion of the Jews, the fulness of 31 the Gentiles, the fall of Antichrist, and the hastening of the second coming of our Lord.” The 32 Westminster Confession of Faith implicitly affirms this vision and addresses the Great 33 Commission command to “Go” by appreciating the need to translate the Bible into other 34 languages:

² Throughout the report, "Church" (with a capital "C") refers to the entirety of the body of Christ, whereas "church" refers to a particular local church.

³ Wes Bredenhof, For the Cause of the Son of God: The Missionary Significance of the Belgic Confession (Fellsmere, FL: Reformation Media and Press, 2011), p. vii.

1 ...[B]ecause these original tongues are not known to all the people of God, 2 who have right unto, and interest in the Scriptures, and are commanded, in 3 the fear of God, to read and search them, therefore they are to be translated 4 into the vulgar language of every nation unto which they come, that, the 5 Word of God dwelling plentifully in all, they may worship him in an 6 acceptable manner; and, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, may 7 have hope. (WCF 1.8)

8
 9 The command to “Go” also is a command to imitate God’s gracious pursuit, 10 exemplified in the sending of his Son,

11
 12 Who, being in very nature God, did not consider equality with God 13 something to be grasped, but made himself nothing, taking the very nature of 14 a servant, being made in human likeness. And being found in appearance as a 15 man, he humbled himself and became obedient to death--even death on a 16 cross! Therefore God exalted him to the highest place and gave him the name 17 that is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, in 18 heaven and on earth and under the earth, and every tongue confess that Jesus 19 Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. (Philippians 2:6-11)

 21 This humble pursuit, in which Jesus traversed the chasm between God and man, is 22 exemplary for his people, for the Apostle Paul wrote in the verse immediately preceding this 23 passage, “Your attitude should be the same as that of Christ Jesus...” (Phil. 2:6). Thus the 24 humble and pursuing posture adopted by the One to whom was given all authority in heaven 25 and on earth (Matt. 28:18), indeed, the One through whom all things were made (Col. 1:16), 26 is likewise incumbent on the disciples of Jesus Christ in the spread of the message of 27 redemption.

 29 Further, we see in the very creation of man as male and female in God’s image that 30 God did not intend that mankind would exercise autonomous dominion on earth, but that 31 God’s very nature would be reflected in the covenantally shaped exercise of that derived 32 dominion. With the post-fall context of Revelation 7 in view and the gospel of grace front 33 and center, mankind’s mandate now involves the spread of God’s redemptive grace to the 34 peoples of the earth. By the work of God’s Spirit through history, the final Day will manifest 35 the grand gathering of all tribes, languages, peoples and nations under the headship of Christ 36 (Eph. 1:10). Viewed from this perspective, God’s covenant of grace obliges believers to 37 proclaim the message of the redemption found alone in Jesus Christ to all the nations, and 38 by doing so, adorn the profession of the gospel (WCF 16.2) through faithful obedience to the 39 Great Commission.

40
 41 As Revelation 5-7 attests, the Church of Jesus Christ is to be composed of a thorough 42 and grand diversity--ALL tribes, tongues, and nations—and in this diversity the glorious

1 splendour of redemption attains its unified expression in shared worship and shared 2 confession. Yet, as Scripture, history and contemporary settings attest, the nations resist the 3 gospel of Jesus Christ. Clearly, such resistance is an attempted theft of God’s glory, but the 4 Spirit of Christ will not be thwarted. Just as Christ’s work of redemption was complete, so 5 too will the Spirit-wrought gathering of the nations for the glorious manifestation of the 6 sons/daughters of God on the last Day (Rom 8:18-30) perfectly accomplish divine purpose.
7 The culturally, linguistically, and historically diverse body of believers will appear with the 8 One Lord Jesus when he returns. “When Christ who is your life appears, then you also will 9 appear with him in glory” (Colossians 3:4). Among that number are converted Jews and 10 Gentiles alike – Greeks, Romans, Europeans, Americans and those from the Muslim world – 11 united to the same Lord Jesus Christ.

12
13 Diversity before God’s throne adds to, rather than detracts from, the coming 14 eschatological celebration. At the same time, the difficulties and spiritual risks in human 15 culture are not to be minimized because, as J. H. Bavinck has put it, “Culture is religion 16 made visible.”⁴ Scripture is replete with exhortations to the people of God to be separated 17 from all sorts of evil, and Jesus’ own high priestly prayer recorded in John chapter 17 18 recognizes that being “in the world” and “not of it” is fraught with difficulty. All human 19 cultural forms must be approached with biblical discernment. What now in the world’s 20 cultures remains difficult to navigate will one day be entirely freed from the permeating 21 effects of sin. The gracious promises of God assure us so.

23 By the advance of the gospel around the world then, God’s glory will one day be on 24 full display in the divinely accomplished unifying under Christ of all the believing peoples 25 through the ages. Since the promise given in Genesis 3:15, God has shown himself to be a 26 God of redeeming grace. Jesus’ delivery of the Great Commission, the apostolic writings of 27 John and Paul, and even the documents penned by the Westminster Assembly all portray the 28 people of God on the same trajectory—that of willing departure from the comforts of home 29 in order to reach other tribes, language, peoples and nations with the gospel, that they may 30 also worship and bring glory to God through confessing that Jesus is Lord.

⁴ J. H. Bavinck, The Impact of Christianity on the Non-Christian World (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1949), p. 57. Bavinck states elsewhere, “The practices dominating social life can never be detached or even thought of apart from their religious basis,” An Introduction to the Science of Missions, trans. David Hugh Freeman (Philadelphia: P&R, 1960), p. 175. Paul Tillich similarly writes, “Religion as ultimate concern is the meaning-giving substance of culture, and culture is the totality of forms in which the basic concern of religion expresses itself. In abbreviation: religion is the substance of culture, culture is the form of religion,” Theology of Culture, ed. R. C. Kimball (New York: Oxford University Press, 1959), p. 42. Cf. Harvie Conn, “Conversion and Culture: A Theological Perspective with Reference to Korea,” in Down To Earth: Studies in Christianity and Culture, ed. John Stott and Robert Coote (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1980), pp. 149-50; Richard L. Pratt, Jr., He Gave Us Stories: The Bible Student’s Guide to Interpreting Old Testament Narratives (Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 1990), pp. 361-81.

1 Thus, the command of the Church is to “Go,” and the attendant attitude of humility
2 which Christ’s disciples are commanded to exhibit, propel the Church into Holy Spirit 3 empowered, self-spending Gospel ministry in which the Church goes to others, doing all 4 possible that others might know and follow Christ in community in their spheres of 5 influence; the places and networks in which they will continue in obedient fulfillment of the 6 Great Commission instead of requiring them to leave their birth culture in order to hear and 7 live out the gospel. Gospel bearers are responsible for faithful gospel communication that is 8 sensitive without compromise, respectful without capitulation. In other words, faithful 9 ministry of the Good News within other tribes, languages, peoples and nations promotes full 10 and diverse obedience of faith (Rom. 1:5) while pursuing the plan and purposes of God 11 expressed in Eph. 3:10-11 and Rev. 7:9-10.

13 With a view to pursuing and implementing faithful witness and to expressing 14 repentance where such witness is compromised, the 39th General Assembly of the Presbyterian 15 Church in America called for the creation of a study committee (the SCIM) to investigate 16 methods of missions bearing the rubric, “Insider Movements.” In order to provide a “biblical 17 assessment of Insider Movements’ histories, philosophies and practices” and to render “a 18 biblical response to interpretations of Scripture used in Insider Movements,” we turn first to 19 defining Insider Movements and exploring their history.

PART 1 – HISTORY AND DEFINITION

1. Defining Insider Movements

An "Insider" is simply a person operating within his own social milieu. "Inside-ness" comes in degrees; to whatever extent a person is received as a true member by other members of his community, he is an insider in that community. That same person may move to another community in which he is not an Insider. Foreign missionaries thus are not Insiders, though through persevering ministry, their degree of "outside-ness" may decline. All other things being equal, most observers consider Insiders more effective than outsiders in reaching a given culture with the gospel.

The nineteenth century sociologist Lorenz von Stein coined the term "movement" in his descriptions of popular upheavals often culminating in national revolutions.⁵ More contemporary definitions of such "social movements" often emphasize the confrontational character of a group's activity; e.g., "collective challenges by people with common purposes and solidarity in sustained interactions with elites, opponents and authorities."⁶ In American history, one might think of the slavery abolition movement, the alcohol temperance movement, pro- and anti-abortion movements, and so on.

The term "movement" in missionary parlance describes a less confrontational social phenomenon in which members of a non-Western society come to perceive themselves in relationship to Jesus.⁷ Donald McGavran, influential mid-twentieth century scholar of missions and church growth strategies, proffered a "People Movement" missions strategy as an alternative to the then-popular "mission station" strategy. Rather than enclaves of missionaries focused on individual conversions, McGavran envisioned a more broad-based approach in which groups of people come gradually to near-simultaneous faith in Christ. Unlike people-group conversions earlier in church history, which started with a king or chieftain who instructed his people to convert en masse, McGavran described a phenomenon which began with the grass roots:

Peoples become Christian as a wave of decisions for Christ sweeps through the group mind, involving many individual decisions but being far more than merely their sum... Each decision sets off others and the sum total powerfully

1 affects every individual. When conditions are right, not merely each sub-2 group but the entire group concerned decides together. We call this process a 3 “People Movement.”⁸
 4

5 Rebecca Lewis uses “movement” to specify the absence of missionary participation 6 in the events described: “‘Movement’: Any situation where the Kingdom of God is growing 7 rapidly without dependence on direct outside involvement.”⁹ Similarly, David Garrison: 8 “Church Planting Movements are defined as movements of indigenous churches planting 9 churches that sweep across a people group or population segment. They are characterized by 10 small house or cell groups with local, lay leaders.”¹⁰ The term “Insider Movement” has 11 appeared in recent missiological articles and conferences to describe a particular type of 12 People Movement in which followers of Christ remain strongly associated with their birth 13 communities. Estimates of the sum total size of all these movements worldwide range from 14 hundreds of thousands to over one million persons; reports on such a scale make Insider 15 Movements an important object of study for our denomination and other Christian groups.¹¹ 16 The missiological literature most frequently discusses Muslim settings, but similar groups 17 have been noted in Hinduism¹² and other world religions. Kevin Higgins, John Travis, and 18 Rebecca Lewis offer representative definitions of this phenomenon:
 19

20 Higgins: A growing number of families, individuals, clans, and/or 21 friendship-webs becoming faithful disciples of Jesus within the culture of 22 their people group, including their religious culture. This faithful discipleship 23 will express itself in culturally appropriate communities of believers who will 24 also continue to live within as much of their culture, including the religious 25 life of the culture, as is biblically faithful. The Holy Spirit, through the Word 26 and through His people will also begin to transform His people and their 27 culture, religious life, and worldview.¹³

¹² For instance, Garrison (Ibid., p. 152) describes Herbert Hofer’s report in the 1990s concerning unchurched Tamils in south India as an important spur toward Insider paradigm thinking. See Herbert Hofer, Churchless Christianity (Pasadena, CA: William Carey Library, 2002).

1 Travis: These Muslim believers are able to set aside certain Islamic beliefs, 2 interpretations and practices, yet remain a part of the Islamic community as 3 they follow Isa. They do not change their name or legal religious affiliation.
4 They continue to identify with the religion of their birth and participate in 5 things Islamic insofar as their conscience and growing sensitivity to Scripture 6 allows. This point on the continuum – a community of Muslims who follow 7 Christ yet remain culturally and officially Muslim – is referred to as C5.
8 Others refer to emerging networks of C5 congregations as "insider 9 movements", since the evangelism, discipling, congregating and organizing 10 of C5 believers happens within the Muslim community, by Muslims with 11 Muslims.¹⁴

13 Lewis: [A]ny movement to faith in Christ where a) the gospel flows through 14 pre-existing communities and social networks, and where b) believing 15 families, as valid expressions of the Body of Christ, remain inside their 16 socioreligious communities, retaining their identity as members of that 17 community while living under the Lordship of Jesus Christ and the authority 18 of the Bible.¹⁵

20 Two important points should be drawn from these definitions for a start. First, 21 Insider Movements are not considered to be the work of Westerners. They are phenomena 22 occurring among national peoples overseas. In choosing to name ourselves the "Study 23 Committee on Insider Movements," we have not as a group journeyed to the parts of the 24 parts of the world in which Insider Movements are found, due to time, budget, and other 25 practical issues attendant to travel to areas in which the presence of foreigners might disrupt 26 local gospel efforts.¹⁶ However, our committee does include field-experienced personnel 27 who are well informed about and have hands-on experience with Insider Movements. In 28 addition, through interviews with key mission leaders and literature review, we have studied 29 what Doug Coleman has called "Insider Movement Paradigm":¹⁷ the analyses of Insider 30 Movements undertaken and influenced by Western missions workers. Such analyses 31 typically feature both descriptive elements (i.e., observation of events in Insider contexts, as 32 interpreted through some particular explicit or implicit hermeneutical grid) and prescriptive 33 elements (i.e., recommendations for how Western missionaries, missions agencies, 34 academics, and churches ought to behave in response to Insider Movements). Some have ¹⁵ Lewis, "Promoting Movements," p. 75.

¹⁶ Some members of this committee have first-hand experience observing Insider Movements. However, we did not gather field data as a group.

¹⁷ Doug Coleman, A Theological Analysis of the Insider Movement Paradigm from Four Perspectives: Theology of Religions, Revelation, Soteriology, and Ecclesiology (Pasadena, CA: William Carey International University Press, 2011).

1 questioned the value of IM paradigm evaluations not accompanied by case studies from the 2 field,¹⁸ but we believe that sufficient literature about the IM paradigm(s) exists to justify its 3 evaluation even apart from direct fieldwork. Moreover, as will be expressed later, the SCIM 4 analysis is concerned with the biblical and theological suppositions that drive IM-type 5 missiology.

6
 7 Second, Higgins and Lewis frame discussion in such a way that Insider Movements 8 are seen necessarily as positive. Higgins says that Insider believers are “becoming faithful 9 disciples of Jesus.” Lewis defines Insider groups to be “faithful expressions of the Body of 10 Christ... living under the Lordship of Jesus Christ and the authority of the Bible.”

11 12 a. A Representative Insider Movement Proponent Argument¹⁹

13 A typical argument by a moderate IM proponent might read as follows: 14

15 Islam remains a major, rapidly growing bloc of the world's unreached 16 population, with 1.7 billion²⁰ people who face eternity apart from Christ. The 17 proportions of this tragedy-in-process require that the Church not only 18 further prioritize mission effort among Muslims, but also evaluate the 19 missionary methods we use. Are current strategies and methods getting in the 20 way of fruitfulness? What would best help believers within Muslim 21 communities to spread the gospel among their peoples? Such Christ- 22 followers who are known and accepted in those communities will have a 23 unique opportunity to share the gospel broadly. Strategic advance of the 24 gospel requires that ways be found that enable new believers to live within 25 their existing relational networks.

 27 Muslim societies are tied to Islam in a way similar to that of Jewish 28 society being tied to the Jewish faith. That is, in those societies, membership 29 in the society and the religion are bound up together in a way which is not 30 ordinarily so in the West. This is the case even though many Muslims are 31 secular in their thinking; even those who are agnostic or atheistic regarding 32 formal religious belief can be considered Muslims. Further, there is a long-

1 term distrust of Christians and their faith (reinforced socially and religiously 2 over time), which means that identification as “Christian” is equated with 3 betrayal of one's family and community—even if the Muslim was known to 4 have been an atheist previously! Also, this long-term distrust often runs two- 5 ways; Christians have often been reluctant to accept a Muslim who comes to 6 faith in Christ unless he completely sheds his 'Muslimness' and joins in with 7 the local expression of Christian culture. And for those from the 8 individualistic West, such a conversion seems natural; Western families and 9 communities don't necessarily rupture as easily over an individual's religious 10 decisions. The bottom line: often, conversion to "Christianity" (to be 11 considered distinct from following Jesus), ordinarily results in social rupture 12 which is more about social betrayal than heart-level faith.

13 14 This need not, indeed, should not, be so.

15 16 Christians need a mindset that permits new followers of Jesus to 17 remain in their existing communities, even their religious communities, much 18 as believing Jews and Gentiles did in the first century A.D. Jesus did not 19 come to found a new religion, but a community that worships in Spirit and in 20 Truth. Just as Jesus did not require the Samaritan woman at the well to leave 21 her existing socio-religious community, neither should we. For the sake of the 22 spread of the gospel we should not require Muslims who come to faith in 23 Christ to leave their relational networks. Instead, we should encourage them 24 to give their supreme allegiance to Christ and live under the authority of the 25 Bible without compromise, while yet remaining in their present 26 circumstances, even continuing to identify themselves as members of the 27 Muslim community. Certainly faith in Christ will involve rejection of false 28 Islamic teaching, but will also allow them to bring culturally meaningful 29 forms of faith and practice (such things as prayer and fasting) to conformity 30 with the teaching of the Bible, resulting in an expression of Christian faith 31 that is understandable and less offensive to Muslim society.

32
33 The point here is that we have no right to require cultural conversion 34 on the part of Muslims or anyone else. Salvation is by grace alone through 35 faith, not by adopting a particular cultural expression of Christianity. Where 36 the Bible is believed and obeyed, cultures are transformed. Don't we have 37 faith that this can happen within Muslim cultures as well?

1 b. Broad analysis of Insider Paradigm Thought

2 Overture 9 of the PCA GA 2011 “affirms that biblical motivations of all 3 those who seek to share the good news of Jesus Christ with those who have never 4 heard or responded to the gospel should be encouraged.” Appreciating certain critical 5 concerns raised by IM advocates, and in the spirit of Overture 9, we affirm the call of 6 the church to faithful witness to Muslims and other unreached peoples around the 7 world. This call to faithful witness surely encourages new believers ordinarily to 8 remain in their familial and social networks as a means to gospel witness, and always 9 in a way that upholds biblical fidelity for the peace and the purity of the church. It is 10 true that certain mission approaches and even local churches have wrongly 11 encouraged separation from family and social networks for reasons beyond scriptural 12 warrant, and insisted upon cultural changes that are not biblical ones. Advancing the 13 gospel in ways that uphold biblically defined diversity should shape worldwide 14 missional approaches, and requires careful self-critical reflection by all involved in 15 gospel outreach to Muslims and others.

 17 However salutary these general ideas, some suggested and attempted 18 applications by Insider Movement proponents have raised questions. For instance, 19 some attempts to facilitate the growth of Insider Movements have drawn attention 20 for compromising central elements of Christianity, such as the divine familial 21 language in Bible translations, which Part One of this committee's report discussed.²¹ 22 Those "Muslim Idiom Translations" have made inroads in some Insider settings, but 23 the two issues are by no means identical, with Insider proponents divided on the 24 merits of Muslim Idiom Translations, and vice versa.

 26 Other bones of contention involve the terminology used to describe these 27 Jesus-followers, both by themselves and by Westerners. Are they part of the Church?
 28 The Kingdom of God? Are they Christians and/or an unusual kind of Muslim? Are 29 terms such as “Christian” and “Muslim” religious markers, faith markers, social 30 markers, or some combination? Are such terminological debates a meaningless 31 argument over arbitrary definitions, or do they reveal warring conceptions of the 32 interplay between a man's self-described identity and his objective identity in the 33 mind of God?

 35 Another set of Insider-related discussions specifically orbits beliefs and 36 practices of Insider groups in Muslim societies. Should they go to the mosque, and if ²¹ “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part One – Like Father, Like Son: Divine Familial Language in Bible Translation,” A Partial Report by the Ad Interim Committee on Insider Movements to the Fortieth PCA General Assembly, May 14, 2012.

1 so for what purpose, and in what context, and with what behavior? What authority do 2 they ascribe to the Qur'an and Muhammad? What relationships should they adopt 3 with existing, more traditional churches in their area? What expectations for belief or 4 practice qualify as unnecessarily “adding to the gospel”?

5 6 Yet another area of dispute concerns evolving perceptions of Western 7 activities overseas. Some see Insider Movements by definition as outside the pale of 8 missionary impact: “The term ‘movement’ implies rapid growth in the number of 9 believers, beyond the influence or control of the ones who introduced the gospel.”²² 10 Is this assessment justified? What is the role of the foreign missionary? Is his 11 purpose best served as a consultant, to be utilized as much or as little as the nationals 12 feel the need for him? Is theological imperialism or cultural insensitivity at work if 13 he attempts to guide a local group in a direction it wasn't already headed? Does 14 spiritual growth occur mainly through the Spirit-led study of the Scriptures in groups 15 whose members have roughly equivalent levels of spiritual maturity, or is the 16 teaching office of the Church indispensable for the long-term well being of local 17 congregations? What are the roles of anthropology and theology in the preparation of 18 missionaries for their work?

19
20 This report will not attempt to answer all these questions directly, as if a 21 single answer would sufficiently address all contexts around the world and across the 22 ages. Discussion of each of these issues deserves extensive careful commentary and 23 suggests a field wide open for further theological research. In Attachment 5, we 24 provide a brief sample discussion of the question of whether Arabic Allah should be 25 translated into English as “God.” Rather than serially discuss all the important 26 particular questions laid out above, we shall lay out high-level biblical principles 27 whose discussion, in our review of IM literature, we believe have been relatively 28 neglected. These principles should play a formative role in developing the 29 interpretive grid through which field reports should be assessed, and from which 30 recommendations for missionaries should flow. Churches and mission agencies alike 31 should weigh the theological arguments and consider their applications through the 32 Affirmations and Denials, as an aid to advancing the gospel of Jesus Christ as 33 faithful witnesses.

35 Originally, the term “Insider Movement” applied primarily to “C-5”²³ groups 36 primarily in Muslim settings, who professed faith in Jesus while remaining in their

1 social networks through continued self-identification as Muslim. Some have used the 2 term more broadly, for other sorts of “cultural insiders”²⁴ who would not identify 3 themselves simply as Muslim. Some writers associated with “Insider” paradigms 4 have concluded that “perhaps it is time we look for a new set of terms.”²⁵ 5 Accordingly, terminology has shifted more recently to “Jesus Movements.”²⁶ In the 6 representative words of Global Teams international director Kevin Higgins, “[M]any 7 of us would like to see the missions community move away from the term “insider 8 movement” as it does not connote accurately what we are seeking to describe.
 9 Instead we are seeking to use language such as ‘movements to Jesus within Islam (or 10 Buddhism, etc.)’, or ‘biblically faithful movements to Jesus within Hinduism 11 (etc.)’.”²⁷ Such terms highlight a general authorial intent not to endorse unbiblical 12 movements, coupled with a conviction that unbiblical distinctives do not in fact 13 characterize the specific movements cited.

14
 15 It must be stressed that writers on IM topics do not have monolithic answers 16 to any of these questions, just as the practices of Insider believers (hereafter simply 17 “Insiders”) themselves vary widely on almost every imaginable point. The varied 18 answers Westerners give to these questions reflect longstanding divergent opinions 19 in Protestantism regarding the Holy Spirit, the Church, the nature of fallen man and 20 his institutions, General and Special Revelation, and more. The fault lines run down 21 the center of that disputed entity known as American evangelicalism, with its 22 fundamentalist, ecumenical, Reformed, pietistic, and charismatic branches. This 23 report surveys key points of debate in Western analysis of Insider Movements:

- 24
 25 (1) Church and Kingdom: How do the Church and the Kingdom of God relate?
 26 Can followers of Jesus meaningfully be said to be a part of one but not the other?
 27 What do those terms even mean, and from where do such definitions arise?

²⁷ Kevin Higgins, “Missiology and the Measurement of Engagement: Personal Reflections of Tokyo,” IJFM 27:3 (Fall 2010): p. 132, fn. 9.

1 (2) Bible and Hermeneutics: By what method should anecdotes from the mission 2 field and Biblical exegesis interact to generate a reliable framework for 3 practicing missionaries to analyze and act? To what extent should perceptions of 4 missionary realities guide the exegesis of Scripture? Does the Bible provide 5 examples of theology being appropriately re-oriented upon the receipt of new 6 information from the field?
7

8 (3) Covenant Identity: Is identity primarily a matter of self-determination or of 9 God's revealed decree? How does conversion to Christ affect how God sees us, 10 and how we should see ourselves? What sorts of guidelines should govern the 11 labels which God's people apply to themselves either intramurally or in witness 12 to an unbelieving world?
13

14 2. History of Modern Insider Movement Paradigms

15 Every generation of Christians recapitulates the same missiological quest for the safe 16 passage between syncretism and a pastorally tone-deaf cultural imperialism. The history of 17 Western involvement in Insider Movements intertwines intimately with multiple historical 18 streams, including evangelical missions in interface with anthropology, Reformed 19 missiology, and especially missions to Muslim communities, leading to specific discussion 20 of Insider Movement analysis.
21

22 a. Modern Missions and Anthropology

23 The nineteenth century saw the nascent field of anthropology learning to 24 evaluate non-Western cultures, documenting habits and beliefs in an attempt to 25 reconstruct historical developments. Anthropologists saw missionaries as “spoilers” 26 who muddied the waters of national cultures by injecting Western practices and 27 beliefs. Missionaries, for their part, largely rejected anthropology as a godless 28 endeavor that relativized truth and opposed gospel ministry.²⁸ 29

30 Twentieth century anthropologists refocused their efforts from forensic cultural 31 spelunking which initially abetted colonialism but later critiqued it. Delegates to the 32 1910 World Missionary Conference in Edinburgh began to see value in such 33 anthropological insights:

²⁸ For more detail on the nineteenth through mid-twentieth century interplay of anthropology and missiology, see Darrell Whiteman, “Anthropology and Mission,” in Paradigm Shifts in Christian Witness: Insights from Anthropology, Communication, and Spiritual Power: Essays in Honor of Charles H. Kraft, edited by Charles E. Van Engen, Darrell Whiteman, and J. Dudley Woodberry (Maryknoll, NY: Orbis, 2008), pp. 3-12.

1 [T]he missionary needs to know far more than the mere manners and 2 customs of the race to which he is sent; he ought to be versed in the 3 genius of the people, that which has made them the people they are; and 4 to sympathise so truly with the good which they have evolved, that he 5 may be able to aid the national leaders reverently to build up a Christian 6 civilization after their own kind, not after the European kind.²⁹

7
 8 Missions in the early twentieth century fell under the sway of mainline 9 denominations that de-emphasized soul winning in favor of social projects which 10 were thought to make Christ's kingdom rule concrete in underprivileged nations.
 11 Nelson Rockefeller's foundation underwrote a lengthy report which concluded that 12 the universal presence of God in all religions rendered evangelism unnecessary.³⁰ 13 Accordingly, over time, mainline missions efforts dwindled, so that today PC(USA) 14 has only "nearly 200 mission co-workers"³¹ (1 per 10,000 denominational members), 15 compared to over 600 missionaries³² serving under the PCA's Mission to the World 16 arm (1 per 500 denominational members).

17 18 Evangelicals, noting the pernicious influence of liberal theology in 19 developments such as the Rockefeller report, organized a series of world mission 20 conferences in the mid-twentieth century which emphasized the participation of 21 active missionaries as opposed to academic theoreticians. Billy Graham's address at 22 the Lausanne Congress in 1974 expressed the desire that missions retain a 23 soteriological focus:

24
 25 The delegates to New York and Edinburgh [the conservative missions 26 conferences of the early twentieth century] were chosen very largely from 27 leaders in evangelism and mission. Leaders of churches, as churches, 28 were not predominantly there. Hence participants could single-mindedly 29 consider world evangelism rather than 'everything' the Church ought to 30 do. The succeeding world missionary gatherings at Jerusalem, Tambaram, 31 Mexico City, and Bangkok were made up not only of evangelists and 32 missionaries, but more and more of eminent leaders of the churches who

1 were there in their capacity as churchmen – not as evangelists or 2 missionaries... Thus the spotlight gradually shifted from evangelism to 3 social and political action. Finally, guidelines were drawn up which 4 called almost entirely for humanization – the reconciliation of man with 5 man, rather than of man with God.³³

6 The exclusion of liberal churchmen from missiology conversations led to a 7 “Great Reversal”³⁴ in the mid-twentieth century from a missiology with broad social 8 concerns to a missiology more focused on evangelism. In the process, “American 9 missiology... has made anthropology central to missiology.”³⁵ The call for 10 missionaries to receive anthropological training had begun as early as the 1910 11 World Missionary Conference to which Graham (B.A., Anthropology, Wheaton 12 College, 1943) had alluded above. Over the course of the twentieth century, the 13 influence of anthropology upon missiology blossomed,³⁶ with formal anthropology 14 training incorporated into the missiology curricula at the Kennedy School of 15 Missions (now defunct), Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Asbury Theological 16 Seminary, the Summer Institute of Linguistics, Wheaton College, Fuller Seminary's 17 School of World Missions (now the School of Intercultural Studies), Bethel 18 University, and, most recently, Biola University and Reformed Theological 19 Seminary. Covenant Theological Seminary offers a Master of Arts in Religion and 20 Culture. These efforts enriched missionaries' understanding of the diverse ways 21 which Christian truth finds expression in cultures around the world.

 23 As missionary interest in anthropology increased, Wheaton College 24 developed a program of study under Russian anthropologist Alexander Grigolia, 25 whose alumni included Billy Graham and Charles Kraft. Wheaton anthropologist 26 Robert B. Taylor founded the journal Practical Anthropology, which grew to 3,000 27 subscribers before merging with the journal Missiology in 1973. American Bible 28 Society linguist/ anthropologist Eugene Nida's book *Customs and Cultures:
 29 Anthropology for Christian Missions* (1954) also widely stimulated anthropological 30 reflection on missions.

31
 32 However, as missiology gained steam as a discrete field and justly increased 33 its appreciation for the insights of anthropology, it also successively became more

1 isolated from interactions with other branches of Christian study, most notably 2 systematic and biblical theology, especially systematic reflection on prolegomena, 3 soteriology, ecclesiology and sacramentology. “Studies in practical theology, 4 Christian education, counseling and missions have become increasingly occupied 5 with social science materials. In some cases those materials have not been well 6 integrated with Scripture. In some cases they have even preempted the proper place 7 of Scripture.”³⁷ This trend parallels the impact of increasing academic specialization 8 across all fields of Christian study. For instance, Don Carson recently noted the lack 9 of integration between biblical and systematic theology in seminary training: 10

11 More commonly, those who teach exegesis warn against imposing the 12 categories of systematic theology onto the biblical texts. Reciprocating in 13 kind, many a systematician teaches theology with minimal dependence on 14 first-hand study of the biblical texts... The danger, on the one hand, is 15 succumbing to the mindless biblicism that interprets texts, and translates 16 them, without wrestling with the syntheses that actually preserve biblical 17 fidelity, and, on the other hand, relying on confessional formulas while no 18 longer being able to explain in some detail how they emerge from 19 reflection on what the Bible actually says.³⁸
 20

21 A similar dynamic played out between missiology and systematic theology, 22 with each finding less reason to talk to the other. Today, perusal of published 23 missiology works and faculties reveals far more scholars with terminal degrees in 24 anthropology than in theology. A swath of theologians, including James Packer, J.
 25 Robertson McQuilkin, and Harvie Conn, have urged theologians and missiologists 26 not to lose sight of the necessary interdependence of their fields,³⁹ but, for more than 27 a generation, sustained interaction between the two fields has remained spotty at 28 best. Even when interaction has occurred, functional biblical authority has frequently 29 suffered loss.
 30

31 Within the context of an increased and disproportional trust in anthropology upon the 32 missionary enterprise, over the course of the twentieth century the missiology 33 community vigorously discussed contextualization, which Charles Kraft defined for 34 purposes of missions as, “a process by which people are able to express their faith in

1 familiar cultural terms without the necessity of converting to another culture.”⁴⁰ 2 Delegates to the ten-day international evangelism conference in Lausanne, 3 Switzerland, in 1974 repeatedly circled back to this concern in their papers, 4 conferences, and lectures. This gathering proved to be the seed that germinated into 5 dozens of meetings and a flurry of influential missiological publications over the 6 following decades. Though the overall mood at Lausanne sought ways to ingrain the 7 gospel into diverse cultures around the world, a few voices urged caution of an 8 overcorrecting pendulum swing into saltless, lightless syncretism without any power 9 to confound the satanic systems operating through non-Christian religions. The 10 working group tasked with responding to this viewpoint received its discussion of 11 non-Christian religions as strongholds of Satan coolly, instead reaffirming the overall 12 Lausanne narrative concerning the benefits of teaching Christianity without 13 disrupting national cultures.⁴¹
14

15 In summary, the pendulum of missiology swung from near-total avoidance of 16 anthropology in the late nineteenth century, to a whole-hearted embrace of the 17 insights of anthropology, which, by crowding out adequate theological reflection, 18 produced a different sort of imbalance. Reformed voices in particular raised concerns 19 that cultural anthropology and theology find a better balance in the missionary 20 endeavor. Yet any voice in the wilderness crying for missions to come from the 21 Church, its theology and church-centered faithful witness, seems to have been 22 overwhelmed by the cries of the social sciences.
23

24 b. Brief Consideration of Reformed Approaches to Mission

25 In response to these widely recognized challenges of the Balkanization of 26 theological scholarship noted above, three missiologists have exerted special 27 influence in conservative Reformed circles: the Dutch missiologist and professor 28 Johann Herman Bavinck; and the Americans Samuel Zwemer of Princeton 29 Seminary, and Harvie Conn of Westminster Seminary. Some of their notable 30 respective contributions are summarized below.
31

32 (1) Samuel Zwemer (1867-1952)⁴²

33 Zwemer, a Michigan native, was ordained in the Reformed Church and 34 served as a missionary to Bahrein, Arabia, for fourteen years, and to Egypt for 1 sixteen years. He wrote extensively about Muslim thought and cast a vision for 2 funds and manpower devoted to missions, editing the quarterly journal The 3 Muslim World for over thirty years, but according to some he saw few 4 conversions to Christianity under his direct ministry.⁴³ He taught missiology at 5 Princeton Theological Seminary from 1929-1937, arriving in the year in which 6 the seminary's denominationally enforced reorganization saw J. Gresham 7 Machen's departure. Zwemer saw the systems of Islam and Christianity as 8 implacable foes:

9 10 Islam is proud to write on its banner, "the Unity of God;" but it is, 11 after all, a banner to the Unknown God. Christianity enters every land 12 under the standard of the Holy Trinity – the Godhead of Revelation.
 13 These two banners represent two armies. There is no peace between 14 them. No parliament of religions can reconcile such fundamental and 15 deep-rooted differences. We must conquer or be vanquished. In its 16 origin, history, present attitude, and by the very first article of its brief 17 creed, Islam is anti-Christian.⁴⁴

18
 19 Zwemer contributed to missions both as a seminarian and as a popular 20 convention speaker until the months just before his death. He wrote extensively 21 concerning popular folk Islam, mainstream historic Islamic scholarship, and 22 fringe Islamic practices, contrasting each with Biblical norms.⁴⁵ "Zwemer more 23 than anyone else put the Muslim world on the map."⁴⁶ In Harvie Conn's 24 assessment, Zwemer began with an overly "monolithic" focus on Islam as a 25 theoretical system but "added increasingly a growing sensitivity to the Muslim as 26 a man and to the effect of 'popular Islam' on theological constructs."⁴⁷

Vander Werff, Christian Mission to Muslims: The Record (South Pasadena, CA: William Carey Library, 1977), p. 235.

1 missiological works have stimulated discussion and serves as textbooks in 2 Reformed training curricula.⁴⁸ Bavinck borrowed Voetius' description of three 3 aspects of the coming and extension of the kingdom of God: the conversion of 4 the heathen, the establishment of the church, and the glorification and 5 manifestation of divine grace.⁴⁹ In unpacking these purposes further, he 6 addresses the cultural accommodation of the biblical message: “To what extent 7 must a new church which has developed within a specific national community 8 accommodate and adjust itself to the customs, practices, and mores current 9 among a people?”⁵⁰ In his nuanced response to this concern, he displays 10 uncommon commitment to the comprehensive reign of Christ in his people: 11

12 ...[T]he term “accommodation” is really not appropriate as a 13 description of what actually ought to take place. It points to an 14 adaptation to customs and practices essentially foreign to the gospel.
 15 Such an adaptation can scarcely lead to anything other than a 16 syncretistic entity, a conglomeration of customs that can never form 17 an essential unity. “Accommodation” connotes something of a denial, 18 of a mutilation. We would, therefore prefer to use the term possessio, 19 to take in possession. The Christian life does not accommodate or 20 adapt itself to heathen forms of life, but it takes the latter in 21 possession and thereby makes them new. Whoever is in Christ is a 22 new creature. Within the framework of the non-Christian life, customs 23 and practices serve idolatrous tendencies and drive a person away 24 from God. The Christian life takes them in hand and turns them in an 25 entirely different direction; they acquire an entirely different content.
 26 Even though in external form there is much that resembles past 27 practices, in reality everything has become new, the old has in essence 28 passed away and the new has come. Christ takes the life of a people in 29 his hands, he renews and re-establishes the distorted and deteriorated; 30 he fills each thing, each word, and each practice with a new meaning 31 and gives it a new direction. Such is neither “adaptation,” nor 32 accommodation; it is in essence the legitimate taking possession of 33 something by him to whom all power is given in heaven and on 34 earth.⁵¹

⁴⁹ Bavinck, Introduction, p. 155.

⁵⁰ Ibid., p.169.

⁵¹ Ibid., p. 178-179.

1 Again, Bavinck proceeded to the application of principle (in this case, 2 possessio) with sensitive appreciation of contextual complexities in both daily 3 life and communal worship, recognizing that the attempt to apply this value 4 “...leads to the greatest problems throughout the entire world.”⁵² He took 5 seriously a variety of questions of biblical teaching, careful understanding of the 6 local context and avoidance of syncretism while concluding, “It will be of 7 immeasurable significance if the new churches can increasingly find forms to 8 express something of their old cultural heritage, without in any way denying their 9 faith in Jesus Christ.”⁵³

11 Bavinck encouraged, for the sake of the spread of the gospel, the practice of 12 possessio by churches where they can do so. Churches do not form and then 13 either accommodate or cower in the presence of a majority culture. Rather, they 14 rejoice in the knowledge the reign and power of Christ and take possession of 15 culture for his glory. This is rightly seen as part of what it means to obey all that 16 Jesus commanded; it is the power of Christ which redeems. The activity of 17 possessio is the obedient outworking of faith in and love for Christ by the power 18 of the Holy Spirit.

19
20 This approach affirmed active pursuit of believers who work out biblical faith 21 in the midst of their communities of birth. But such faith is not passive; it adopts 22 a faith posture that recognizes that the gates of hell will not prevail against the 23 advance of the ekklēsia of Christ. Idolatry and sin of every kind are shunned in 24 faithfulness to Christ and his Word while his covenantal demands on all of life 25 are affirmed. And thus as God in Christ brings salvation and the transforming 26 power of the Spirit, God’s people, in union with Christ, take possession of 27 everyday forms of life in obedient submission to his Kingship. Nothing is neutral; 28 all things are either rejected or transformed and thereby brought under the rule of 29 Christ.

31 (3) Harvie Conn (1933-1999)

32 Perhaps the most influential American Reformed and Presbyterian missiologist 33 of the late twentieth century was Harvie Conn of Westminster Theological 34 Seminary. His overview of "God's Plan for Church Growth" stands as a concise 35 summary of the scriptural themes of covenantally aware evangelism.⁵⁴ A former 1 missionary to Korea, Conn may best be known today for his contributions to 2 urban missiological thinking,⁵⁵ but his Eternal Word and Changing Worlds

 3 (EWCW),⁵⁶ adapted from a series of lectures at Fuller Theological Seminary, 4 directly anticipated the need for ongoing "trialogue" among the disciplines of 5 theology, missions and anthropology. Conn outlined the benefits he saw in such 6 interactions, but nearly thirty years later, his vision remains incompletely realized.
 7

8 Conn acknowledged how secular anthropology had historically minimized 9 the place of religion in culture: "I feel that we need a new critique of theoretical 10 thought, in this case of anthropology."⁵⁷ And while asserting biblical priority in 11 the trialogue, Conn exhorted theologians to remember their own human 12 fallibility. "Theology, after all, is one more scientific discipline. And like any 13 other, it too, misreads."⁵⁸ Having voiced these reservations, Conn 14 enthusiastically encouraged ongoing trialogue as necessary for the advance of all 15 three disciplines involved. While showing gratitude for the insights of then-16 contemporary missionary thinkers such as Kenneth Pike, Eugene Nida and 17 Charles Kraft, he also expressed concerns, usually framed as questions. Conn 18 envisioned Christians drawn forward from all the various disciplines in a 19 conscious, ongoing process of "theologizing," the construction of theology.
 20

21 This theologizing process, subservient to the Scriptures and mindful of the 22 historical theological formulations of the Church, sought to self-consciously 23 relate scriptural truth to a particular context. In short, theologizing requires an 24 evangelistic eye and concern for process as well as product, and to be pastoral as 25 well as prophetic,⁵⁹ guided by an understanding not only of Scripture but also of 26 the changing world, for instance the challenges accompanying the spread of the 27 gospel in the global South. Conn advocated both steadfast scriptural vision, 28 combined with flexibility in applying the gospel within nonwestern cultures, as 29 the only viable option for the future of missions, to encourage and participate in 30 bringing about the faithful and diverse worship we anticipate from the Book of 31 Revelation.

1 Conn showed the value of anthropology in identifying elements of Muslim 2 culture of which missionaries should be aware in order to minister successfully.⁶⁰
 3 He argued that individualism was a Western cultural artifact which could lead 4 one to think of conversion simply at the level of individual response, whereas 5 both the Scriptures and anthropology show the potential role of group solidarity 6 in conversion.⁶¹ Conn nevertheless recognized that the gospel of Jesus always 7 stands as a stumbling block, requiring the work of the Holy Spirit to bring men to 8 faith. “We are under no illusion in all of this that a new sensitivity to... the 9 cultural condition of Muslim responses to Christ will obliterate the ‘stumbling 10 block’ that the gospel will always be. Even when Christ came to ‘his own’ they 11 received him not. His entrance into any culture always brings crisis. We are 12 simply insisting that it must be Christ who is the stumbling block.”⁶² 13

14 Many authors have commented on a lack of clarity in Conn's prose,⁶³ finding 15 for instance his coining of non-descriptive terminology (e.g., the mindsets of 16 “Consciousness One,” “Consciousness Two,” and “Consciousness Three” in 17 EWCW) as a thwart to the easy digestion of his ideas. But his teaching career at 18 Westminster gave him a mediatory role between the worlds of missiology and 19 Reformed academia, and his influence continues upon those who sympathize and 20 those who contend with his frequently elusive approaches.

22 c. Missions to Muslims

23 The political and military struggles between Islamic and Christian forces 24 throughout medieval and Renaissance history⁶⁴ ensured that “the Turks,” meaning 25 the Ottoman Muslims whose armies once ranged as far west as Vienna, often occupied 26 the thoughts of Christian scholars.⁶⁵ Nineteenth century Englishmen debated the 27 relative benefits of a "confrontational" stance toward Islam that highlighted its 1 differences with Christianity, and a "conciliatory" stance that emphasized common 2 ground.⁶⁶

3

4 In the early twentieth century, Samuel Zwemer surveyed the results of the 5 "great century of evangelism" preceding him. Although few Christian communities 6 had arisen in Muslim-dominated areas, Zwemer noted that eighty-five percent of 7 Muslims lived under British rule. He predicted the imminent and utter 8 Christianization of Muslim lands: "Islam is a dying religion."⁶⁷ Instead, colonialism 9 itself collapsed, and the international thirst for oil funneled Western resources into 10 impoverished Muslim areas, funding a reinvigorated Islamic movement that found 11 political unity in opposition to encroachment from both Moscow and Washington.
12 For the following fifty years, Christianity gained minimal traction in Muslim 13 countries so long as it was viewed as another product of Western imperialism, 14 imposed by outsiders. The small number of converts often found themselves cast out 15 from their societies, forced into the community of Western expatriates.
16

17 W.R.W. Gardner (1873-1928),⁶⁸ a missionary in India, appealed to Muslims 18 on the basis of their claim to submit to God and their perceived continuity with the 19 religion of Jesus. He argued that Muslims bore a burden of proof to show that modern 20 Christianity was not in fact the faith of Jesus and his disciples; otherwise, the Muslim 21 must practice true "submission" (for which the Arabic word is Islam, with the "one 22 who submits" known by the related word Muslim) to God as revealed in Christianity.
23 This would naturally lead one to realize that the Qur'an (and, by extension, 24 Muhammad) is incorrect about the nature and purpose of Jesus. As Gardner put it: 25

26 For we maintain that what we hold, and try in spite of all the failings 27 inherent in poor human nature to practise, is simply Christianity as Jesus 28 taught it—in fact the true Islam, which Muhammad and the Qur'an both 29 witnessed to as being the Religion of God.⁶⁹ 30

31 Writing in advance of the 1978 North American Conference on Muslim 32 Evangelization at Glen Eyrie, CO, John Stott linked the issue of culture with that of 33 self-identification: "Is it possible to conceive of converts becoming followers of 34 Jesus without so forsaking their Islamic culture that they are regarded as traitors?"

1 Can we even contemplate Jesus mosques instead of churches and Jesus Muslims 2 instead of Christians? It is with radical questions like these that the October conference 3 [in Glen Eyrie] was to grapple.”⁷⁰ At that conference, Harvie Conn proposed⁷¹ that 4 missionaries seek a “Muslimun ‘Issawiyun movement”—a movement of those who 5 identify themselves as “submitted to Jesus.” The context of Conn's comments leave 6 unclear whether, like Gardner, he was simply making a play on the etymology of 7 Muslim, or whether Conn was suggesting that those who submitted to God in Christ 8 might legitimately continue to identify within their communities as Muslim. But the 9 next generation of missiologists would clearly propose the latter—sometimes as part 10 of a larger term, e.g., “Muslim follower of Christ,” and sometimes not.

 12 Also in 1978, the Lausanne Committee’s Theology and Education Group 13 convened in Willowbank, Bermuda, with a mixture of invited anthropologists as well 14 as theologians including James Packer and John Stott. This body published a 15 consensus statement that aspired to repurpose and redeem elements of Islam:

 17 Although there are in Islam elements which are incompatible with the 18 gospel, there are also elements with a degree of what has been called 19 “convertibility.” For instance, our Christian understanding of God, 20 expressed in Luther's great cry related to justification, “Let God be God,” 21 might well serve as an inclusive definition of Islam. The Islamic faith in 22 divine unity, the emphasis on man's obligation to render God a right 23 worship, and the utter rejection of idolatry could also be regarded as 24 being in line with God's purpose for human life as revealed in Jesus 25 Christ. Contemporary Christian witnesses should learn humbly and 26 expectantly to identify, appreciate and illuminate these and other values.
 27 They should also wrestle for the transformation—and, where possible, 28 integration—of all that is relevant in Islamic worship, prayer, fasting, art, 29 architecture, and calligraphy.⁷²

(1) Charles Kraft and Fuller Seminary

Due to its size and reputation as the educational epicenter for evangelical missiology, Fuller Seminary has played prominently in shaping the direction of two

McGavran's work formed the foundation for the "Church Growth" movement in the United States and elsewhere, and in essence the Western approach to Insider Movements is the application with varying degrees of intensity of the so-called seeker-sensitive "do what seems to work" values to missionary endeavors. McGavran's pragmatic approach received both emulation and critique widely⁷⁴ and was the subject of an analytic conference at Westminster Seminary in 1975.⁷⁵

To teach Missionary Anthropology, McGavran recruited Charles "Chuck" Kraft, a pivotal (and thus controversial) figure in missiology. Likening Kraft's impact to the historical turning point from B.C. to A.D. marked by the birth of Christ, his Fuller colleague Charles Van Engen quipped, "One might say that there is missiology before Kraft (BK) and missiology after Kraft (AK)."⁷⁶ And indeed Kraft's influence upon missiology as a field and upon individual missionaries personally over the last forty years would be difficult to overstate.

Kraft studied anthropology and linguistics at Wheaton College, completed a B.D. at the Brethren Church's Ashland Seminary, and after a fruitful yet controversial missionary stint among Nigerian polygamists, "[T]here is no question that Chuck was seen as a maverick by Mission leaders, not without some reason."⁷⁷ Ph.D. studies at what is now the Hartford Seminary Foundation led to a teaching position at UCLA, and then at Fuller. Kraft found inspiration in McGavran's The Bridges of God as well as Eugene Nida's Customs and Cultures. Due to his extensive training as an anthropologist, rather than examining anthropology through the lens of theology, "anthropology itself tended to be taken as a given—as an autonomous scientific discipline—to which, ⁷⁴ For instance in Evaluating the Church Growth Movement: Five Views, ed. Gary L. McIntosh (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2004).

1 according to Kraft at least, evangelical theology ought to adjust.”⁷⁸ Kraft 2 polarized the missiology community with his application of Nida's linguistic 3 concept of dynamic equivalence⁷⁹ to the broader field of missionary endeavor.
 4

5 Nida saw the missionary task as one of communication across 6 languages and cultures. It was a process of translational equivalence, 7 of communicating messages in appropriately reconstructed formal and 8 semantic structures. Kraft has extended the model beyond translation 9 into realms of transculturation and theology. The significance of that 10 broadening cannot be overemphasized.⁸⁰ 11

12 When applied to Bible translation, “dynamic equivalence” translated a Greek 13 or Hebrew word into a word in the target language felt to affect the mind of the 14 reader similarly. When applied to missions, dynamic equivalence meant that 15 missionaries might not seek for nationals to accept specific beliefs associated 16 with Western Christianity, but rather to encourage them to develop a theology for 17 their own culture. True theology would be known by identifying those elements 18 of belief which arose spontaneously and independently in multiple cultures. Even 19 Biblical categories such as "Son of God" or belief in the death of Jesus might be 20 sidelined if too difficult to swallow or prone to misunderstanding: 21

22 A Muslim asks us, “Was Jesus 'the Son of God'”? How do we 23 answer? We cannot answer, “yes” unless we are blind to, or 24 unconcerned about, the impact of our answer on our Muslim hearer.
 25 Note the fact that sonship is an analogy—it's an example—there's 26 nothing sacred in either that term or that concept, except insofar as it 27 communicates some kind of truth. We have learned to understand and 28 agreed among ourselves to refer to precious Scriptural truth by 29 employing this word form to describe Christ. But the word form is 30 only valuable when it signals that meaning. If this word form, this 31 medium of communication, signals anything other than that Scriptural 32 meaning, it loses its usefulness and must be replaced...⁸¹

33 The issues that we deal with, even the so-called religious issues, 34 are primarily cultural, and only secondarily religious... [The Muslim] 35 doesn't have to be convinced of the death of Christ. He simply has to ⁸¹ Charles Kraft, "Distinctive Religious Barriers to Outside Penetration," in the Report on Consultation on Islamic Communication (Marseille, 1974), pp. 67-68. Part One of our report (pp. 55-56) critiqued the idea that "Son of God" is a term of analogy or metaphor.

1 pledge allegiance and faith to the God who worked out the details to 2 make it possible for his faith response to take the place of a 3 righteousness requirement. He may not, in fact, be able to believe in 4 the death of Christ, especially if he knowingly places his faith in God 5 through Christ, for within his frame of reference, if Christ died, God 6 was defeated by men, and this, of course is unthinkable.⁸²

8 Nor was frank ignorance an obstacle to redemption: “Can people who are 9 chronologically A.D. but knowledge wise B.C. (i.e., have not heard of Christ), or 10 those who are indoctrinated with a wrong understanding of Christ, be saved by 11 committing themselves to faith in God as Abraham and the rest of those who 12 were chronologically B.C. did? ... I personally believe that they can and many 13 have.”⁸³ Kraft also held a positive view of doctrinal controversies which have 14 troubled church history: “It is likely that most of the ‘heresies’ can validly be 15 classed as cultural adaptations rather than as theological aberrations. They, 16 therefore, show what ought to be done today rather than what ought to be 17 feared.”⁸⁴ It must be noted that the aforementioned sentiments do not comprise 18 an explicitly recurring theme in Kraft's work and are not cited approvingly (or 19 indeed at all) by typical proponents of Insider paradigms today.⁸⁵ However, these 20 serve as examples of the potential for anthropological relativism to overly inform 21 missiological analysis of national practices and beliefs, an error at least as serious 22 as the contrary mistake of ignoring anthropological insights altogether.
 23 Repeatedly Kraft appealed to the “behavioral insights” of anthropology in his 24 critique of the “closed” and “static” (both meant as pejorative) inerrantist 25 positions of Francis Schaeffer and founding Fuller professor Harold Lindsell.
 26

27 Kraft’s later work turned from anthropology to spiritual warfare topics of 28 demonic activity and “deep healing,” areas which he saw as neglected in Western 29 theology but deeply relevant to the daily concerns of other countries. Such a brief 30 survey of a long career (one not yet concluded) risks distorting its subject's 31 contributions by focusing most heavily upon the moments of controversy rather 32 than the long stretches of calm, constructive labor. Even Kraft's detractors 33 acknowledge his godly character and tireless efforts to train and minister to the 34 missionary population. Kraft helped missionaries to identify and avoid the 1 pitfalls of their own cultural blind spots, legitimizing anthropology as an 2 indispensable adjunct to cross-cultural evangelism.

3 4 (2) Responses to Kraft

5 Founding Fuller professor Carl F. H. Henry, who had left the seminary to 6 become founding editor of Christianity Today, swiftly published a lengthy 7 critical review of Kraft's Christianity and Culture, focusing on Kraft's view of 8 the Bible, his perceived usage of anthropology to trump theology, his resulting 9 cultural relativism, and his conflation of the doctrines of the inspiration and 10 illumination of Scripture:

11
 12 Kraft assumes that special divine revelation continues beyond the 13 Bible, and that communicators enlightened by behavioral concessions 14 especially enjoy it. Scriptural teachings are devalued as culturally 15 conditioned while modern communication theories are assimilated to 16 the revelation of the Spirit... To accommodate cultural-relative 17 meaning in the biblical texts Kraft shifts from grammatico-historical 18 interpretation to ethno-linguistic interpretation (p. 134ff.) and then 19 reads into the texts the culture-relativism that humanistic behavioral 20 science requires... Kraft rejects the view that God's transcendent 21 relation to culture requires the Christian to prescribe a system of 22 theology valid for all cultures (ibid. 117).⁸⁶

 24 Harvie Conn assessed Kraft more approvingly in a series of Fuller Seminary 25 lectures,⁸⁷ later expanded into a book-length treatment of “theology, 26 anthropology, and mission in dialogue,”⁸⁸ which cited Kraft twice as often as 27 any other author. Conn consigned mention of Kraft's inclusivism to a footnote, 28 calling the view “controversial” without debating its merits,⁸⁹ and overall 29 praising “the richness of Kraft's contributions.”⁹⁰ Conn defended Kraft against 30 Henry's accusations of neo-orthodoxy, expressing appreciation for Kraft's 31 recognition that not only the message, but also the speaker and the audience, 32 shape the process of communication. “The heart of Kraft's approach lies in his 33 penetrating understanding of God as being in constant interaction with human

3 that Kraft was “in danger of minimizing the predominately Godward dimension” 4 of the nature of Scripture.⁹³

6 (3) Ralph Winter and the Muslim Frontier

7 8 Dan Fuller’s childhood friend Ralph Winter⁹⁴ established a distance-learning 9 program for pastors in Guatemala during his missionary work there from 1956-10 1966. The son of an engineer who designed the Los Angeles freeway system, 11 Winter grew up at Lake Avenue Congregational Church, which hosted the first 12 classes of Fuller Seminary. An inquisitive polymath, he studied civil engineering 13 at Cal Tech, theology at Princeton and Fuller seminaries,⁹⁵ and language at the 14 Summer Institute of Linguistics, achieving a Masters’ degree in Teaching English 15 as a Second Language (Columbia University Teachers College) and a PhD in 16 linguistics (Cornell University). At each institution he was known for analyzing 17 the curriculum and teaching method, suggesting improvements, and offering to 18 author textbooks or teach classes while still a student himself, often to the 19 discomfiture of his instructors.

21 McGavran invited Winter to join the Fuller School of Mission faculty, where 22 he taught from 1966-1976, leaving to establish three related institutions: the U.S.
23 Center for World Mission; William Carey International University (WCIU)⁹⁶ (of 24 which he was president, and at which his daughter Rebecca Lewis (BA History) 25 has taught Islamics and Church History); and the William Carey Library 26 publishing house, all operating on the former campus of Nazarene University 27 several blocks from Fuller Seminary in Pasadena, CA.

29 Winter won wide acclaim for a speech delivered at the 1974 Lausanne Congress 30 on World Evangelization. The prevailing wisdom of the day taught that each 31 country should have a single national church that crossed all racial, cultural, and 32 even language boundaries within that country. Thus, a country that had a national church was deemed no longer appropriate as an evangelistic target for Western missionaries.⁹⁷ By redefining the missionary challenge in terms of cultural groups rather than political boundaries, “Winter's speech accomplished nothing less than fixing Lausanne's attention on more than 2 billion 'unreached peoples,' reigniting cross-cultural evangelism while restoring to many of the delegates and their organizations a reason for being.”⁹⁸ Winter also founded *Mission Frontiers Magazine*⁹⁹ in 1979 and served as longtime editor for that publication.

As the contextualization debate continued to evolve, John Travis (pseudonym) described a variety of expressions of Christian faith in Muslim cultures along a “C-scale,” with the “C” standing for “Christ-centered Communities.”¹⁰⁰ Rick Brown would later generalize this scale to include non-Muslim situations, as follows:¹⁰¹

|----|---|
| C1 | Believers are open about their new spiritual identity as disciples of Jesus Christ and citizens of God’s eternal Kingdom. They also have a new socioreligious identity as converts to a Christian social group. They follow primarily outsider religious practices. They use an outsider language and terminology in their meetings. |
| C2 | They are much like C1, except that they use insider language, usually with outsider terminology. |
| C3 | They are much like C2, except that they use many insider terms and many religious practices that seem compatible with the Bible, although not ones that are particular to the socioreligious community of their birth. |
| C4 | They are like C3, except that they seek a distinct socioreligious identity that is neither the insider identity of their birth nor the identity of a convert to Christianity. |
| C5 | They are like C4, except that they retain the socioreligious identity of their birth and might use insider terms and practices particular to the community of their birth, as long as they seem compatible with the Bible. |
| C6 | They are usually like C5, except that they are secretive about their new spiritual identity. |

1 Thus, a C1 church might operate as an American church transplanted in toto
 2 to a foreign land without any changes whatsoever. C2 through C4 show 3 increasing degrees of contextual accommodation to local styles. C5, 4 controversially, adds continued self-identification with the religion of one’s birth, 5 justified on the basis of the intercalated nature of culture and religion, hence the 6 term “socioreligious” in Travis’ scale. C6 describes secret churches in heavily 7 persecuted areas. Despite the well-discussed limitations of such a one-8 dimensional assessment of church/culture dynamics, the simplicity of the C-scale 9 made it appealing, as evidenced by the frequency with which subsequent 10 literature used it. Travis indicates that the C-scale is a descriptive rather than 11 prescriptive tool. That distinction in the end dissatisfies. First, many others have 12 applied Travis’ C-Scale prescriptively, in both their active and their passive 13 affirmations of IM missiological methods. Second, when description lacks 14 critique, it renders its own internal affirmation of that which it presents.
 15 Moreover, though leaving room for missionary approaches at other points along 16 the C-scale, Travis would later advocate wide adoption of the "C-5" approach:

17
 18 As we have continued to see the limits of C4 in our context, and as 19 our burden for lost Muslims only grows heavier, we have become 20 convinced that a C5 expression of faith could actually be viable for 21 our precious Muslim neighbors and probably large blocs of the 22 Muslim world.¹⁰²

 24 Winter edited *IJFM*¹⁰³ beginning in 2001, with many subsequent articles 25 discussing Insider Movements. IJFM's first issue on Muslim contextualization in 26 January 2000 had already featured articles such as Bernard Dutch's "Should 27 Muslims become 'Christians?'" and the John Travis/Andrew Workman 28 contribution, "Messianic Muslim Followers of Isa: A Closer Look at C5 29 Believers and Congregations."¹⁰⁴ That same issue contained an early article by 30 Rick Brown advocating replacement of "Son of God" in Muslim-aimed Bible 31 translations with another phrase such as "righteous servants of God."¹⁰⁵ Brown

5 Dutch spoke of the need for Muslims to reject Islamic doctrines in favor of 6 Jesus, while retaining Muslim cultural elements and community relationships. "I 7 believe that our best hope for reaching the vast Muslim populations of the world 8 is to plant flourishing churches of Muslim background believers who remain 9 culturally relevant to Muslim society... [W]e should not impose unnecessary 10 changes to the cultural identity of Muslim background believers."¹⁰⁶ While Dutch 11 emphasized the need for such Christ-followers to hold to recognizably Christian 12 doctrine in their own hearts and private fellowships, he also sought justification 13 for them to present themselves as Muslims when challenged about their lives: 14

15 Like believers in the West who are effective in sharing their faith, 16 they tailor their identity according to the openness of their audience.
 17 People who ask questions in a belligerent or ridiculing manner are 18 usually shown a mainstream, God-fearing Muslim identity with few 19 differences. This avoids wasting precious opportunities to bear 20 witness on people not ready to hear (Matt. 7:6).¹⁰⁷

22 Dutch's subsequent anecdotes clarify his concern that Christ-followers come 23 under persecution when they make their faith commitments clear to their 24 community—partly due to the false negative connotations of Americanism and 25 immorality accompanying identification as "Christian," but partly due to correct 26 recognition that the Christians do not in fact accept Muhammad as a prophet, or 27 the Qur'an as a divine message. Stuart Caldwell's contribution to that same IJFM
 28 issue more explicitly recognized that such Christ-followers may forever remain 29 inside Islam in a religious sense as well as a cultural one. He saw any future 30 breakaway from Islam as something that Westerners may desire but should not 31 attempt to effect:
 32

33 [W]e seek and expect a believing community to form and remain 34 within the religio-cultural world of the Muslim community, at least 35 for some time. As in the early Church's eventual break from Judaism, 36 so too believers may eventually break away from the Muslim 37 religious community. However, I believe this should be instigated

1 from the Muslim side, as it was in the first century from the Jewish 2 side. Forming a community of believers within the religio-cultural 3 world of Muslims will include Islamic places and patterns of 4 worship... [N]o confrontational effort to replace the Qur'an with the 5 Bible is needed, at least not at the beginning... God's Spirit will lead 6 his people into all truth.¹⁰⁸

8 e. The “Insider” label

9 J. Henry Wolfe dates the wide use of the phrase “Insider Movement” (IM) to 10 the 2004 gathering of the International Society of Frontier Missiology (ISFM), the 11 parent organization of International Journal of Frontier Missions (IJFM).¹⁰⁹ Editor 12 Ralph Winter devoted the September-October 2005 issue of Mission Frontiers to the 13 topic, “Can We Trust Insider Movements?” with the overall answer, “Yes.” 14

15 In 2007, IJFM featured one of the few published back-and-forth interchanges 16 about IM, beginning with a series of ten questions from Gary Corwin about IM 17 practices, accompanied by lengthy answers from several IM proponents.¹¹⁰ Corwin, 18 the associate editor of Evangelical Missions Quarterly and missiologist for SIM-19 USA and Arab World Ministries, and his pseudonymous colleague L.D. Waterman 20 responded to the answers in the following issue,¹¹¹ and Rick Brown reacted to 21 Corwin and Waterman.¹¹² The interaction highlighted both the agreements and the 22 diversity between various IM proponents, and between proponents and critics.
23 Brown's response laid out what he saw as the Reformed approach to missions, which 24 he defined in terms of pragmatic anthropological observation anointed as "God's 25 work," notably omitting the idea of doctrine derived from Scripture: 26

27 Being Reformed in theology, for me the important question is not “What 28 works and does not work in Muslim evangelism?” or “Does this have 29 adequate precedent in church history?” For me the important questions

8 9 f. Common Ground Consultants and the Emergent Church

10 Kim Gustafson, a former missionary to Jordan, returned to the United States 11 in 1995 and organized Common Ground Consultants, sponsoring an ongoing series 12 of stateside and international invitation-only seminars which have become a vehicle 13 for Insider Movement Paradigm philosophy and practice of ministry. These seminars 14 included a concept of “kingdom circles” which emphasizes a membership in Jesus’ 15 kingdom that could be equally enjoyed by sociologically defined “Christians” and 16 “Muslims.” Attendees are instructed not to share information about the seminars 17 with non-attendees,¹¹⁴ and the training materials are not publicly available. Pastors 18 associated with Common Ground, either as instructors or hosts, promulgate Insider 19 methodologies through Internet presentations¹¹⁵ and a continuing series of 20 nationwide “Jesus and the Qur'an” seminars.¹¹⁶

22 Several authors have expressed similar concern with the orthodoxy of 23 Common Ground philosophy, exegesis, and methods.¹¹⁷ In his analysis of the 24 Common Ground Conference, Don Little commented, 25

26 Sitting through the sessions, I often felt as if the CGC people have largely 27 disowned any form of the institutional church, that is, the actual 28 established way that most Christians worldwide are nurtured and taught, 29 and involved in worship and fellowship. In their efforts to distance 30 themselves from the weaknesses and flaws of the church around the 1 world, as these flaws appear in local churches, denominations and groups, 2 I felt as if they were undervaluing the universal church itself.¹¹⁸ 3

4 Common Ground instructor Jim Nelson confirmed Little's assessment: "The 5 institutional church contains believers in varying proportions, but its denominations, 6 buildings, ordination, clergy, etc. are creations of men. See Pagan Christianity by 7 Frank Viola and George Barna. I am very much against exporting man-made 8 systems."¹¹⁹ And indeed, Viola and Barna hold that, "There is not a single verse in 9 the entire New Testament that supports the existence of the modern-day pastor! He 10 simply did not exist in the early church... it is the role that [pastors] fill that both 11 Scripture and church history are opposed to."¹²⁰ Viola is associated with the 12 Emergent Church movement,¹²¹ a loose coalition of post-evangelicals whose 13 prominent authors include Brian McLaren, Rob Bell, Jim Wallis, and Michael Frost.
14

15 As seen in Viola's sentiment above, Emergent thinkers tend to share the 16 conviction of some Insider proponents that much in evangelical theology and 17 practice exceeds or even violates a Scripture. "There is a growing desire in Western 18 Christianity to move away from the traditions of the church and return to a purer 19 Biblical paradigm. The Emergent church is reflective of this move, and I recognize 20 the attraction. The Insider paradigm seems to borrow from this new tradition, and 21 certainly owes much to it."¹²² Though certain IM conclusions resonate with those of 22 Emergent church advocates, such affinities between IM and Emergent thinking do 23 not necessarily indicate a dependent or inter-dependent relationship between them.
24 Nonetheless the zeitgeist and methods share certain features.
25

26 McLaren, first an English professor who became the founding and now 27 former pastor of Cedar Ridge Church in Spencerville, Maryland, is known for 28 wordplay intended to challenge preconceived categories, as evidenced by the lengthy 29 subtitle of his manifesto A Generous Orthodoxy: Why I Am a Missional, Evangelical,

1 *Green, Incarnational, Depressed-yet-Hopeful, Emergent, Unfinished CHRISTIAN.*¹²³
 2 This overlapping of categories resonates with Insider paradigm thoughts concerning 3 overlapping religious terms. McLaren’s The Secret Message of Jesus focuses on 4 Jesus’ kingdom language in a way which recalls the Common Ground “kingdom 5 circles”: “What if the message of Jesus was good news – not just for Christians, but 6 also for Jews, Buddhists, Muslims, Hindus, New Agers, agnostics, and atheists?...
 7 Wouldn’t it be interesting if the people who started discovering and believing the 8 hidden message of Jesus were people who aren’t even identified as Christians...?”¹²⁴ 9

10 One might allow that evangelicals, too, believe that those who currently 11 identify as agnostic can start believing Jesus, and then are no longer agnostics but 12 Christians. As is typical in his writing style, McLaren’s wording leaves options such 13 as this open to the reader, but also open by apparent design is the possibility that 14 such Christ-believers retain their previous religious designation, if they so choose.
 15 This latter interpretation is more likely, since there seems little reason for McLaren 16 to suggest so tentatively that the message of Jesus would be good news for agnostics 17 who have become Christians.
 18

19 g. Recent Developments

20 21 As discussed in “A Call to Faithful Witness: Part One: Like Father, Like 22 Son,” concern over Muslim Idiom Translations waxed over several years, resulting 23 in various articles in the lay press as well as simultaneous formal study of the issue 24 by at least three Christian denominations – the Assemblies of God, the Evangelical 25 Presbyterian Church, and the Presbyterian Church in America. Insider Movements, 26 although a prominent issue in some national churches such as that of Bangladesh, 27 have seen a relatively lower stateside profile, until the magazine Christianity Today 28 (CT)¹²⁵ presented IM in a cover story, “Worshipping Jesus in the Mosque.” Gene 29 Daniels (pseudonym) interviewed a mature East African Insider about his faith and 30 his thoughts on culture and religion.¹²⁶ In a subsequent clarification added to the 31 Internet version of the article, the interviewee disavowed the article’s title: “The 32 ‘people of the Gospel’ are not Muslims theologically. They are not worshipping Jesus

5 An accompanying article by Timothy Tennent spoke of "churchless" 6 Christianity growing among Hindu and Muslim peoples who "do not belong to any 7 visible, formal, church, and do not call themselves Christians."¹²⁸ It also outlined 8 Travis' C-scale and the debates surrounding it, concluding that, "Christ-loving 9 movements are growing in countries where a traditional church has been absent or 10 long-gone."¹²⁹ In another article, John Travis¹³⁰ affirmed that Insiders are, and 11 consider themselves to be, part of "the church universal." He proposed that 12 evangelicals should consider Insider Movements to be biblical because, "They, just 13 as we, are saved by grace through faith in Jesus alone, not by religious affiliation."¹³¹ 14 Phil Parshall, known for his gently yet firmly expressed concerns about C-5 15 approaches,¹³² laid out the controversial elements seen in some Insider Movements, 16 such as recitation of the Muslim shahada creed, participation in mosque rituals, and 17 unqualified identification as "Muslim." Parshall urged "prayerful respect" among 18 missionaries debating these issues.¹³³
19

20 An unsigned CT editorial emphasized the "messy" realities of missionary 21 work and encouraged "cautious optimism" toward Insider strategies, seeing it as 22 potentially "right and true" for a follower of Christ to honor Muhammad as "a 23 prophet of God" as long as Muhammad was not "the prophet" (italics original), while 24 affirming the role of the global church in helping local groups of believers to 25 gradually shed syncretistic ideas and practices.¹³⁴

1 A responding article by Kevin DeYoung at The Gospel Coalition website
2 noted that the East African Insider interviewed in Christianity Today described a 3 situation in which the traditional church was not absent, but simply culturally strange 4 to those of Muslim background. "Shouldn't some things be strange when we are 5 called out of darkness into light?" DeYoung cited concerns with Insider paradigms, 6 including naïveté toward the permeating nature of culture, a casual attitude toward 7 theology, and an eccentric doctrine of the Holy Spirit's teaching role. "The early 8 church was certainly Spirit-filled, but it was also devoted to the apostles' teaching.
9 To expect the Spirit to teach what we won't does not honor the Spirit. Instead, it 10 dishonors the work he has already done in leading the once-for-all apostolic band

PART 2 – SCRIPTURE AND THEOLOGY

1. The Scriptural and Confessional Basis of our Approach

Proper investigation of any theological, missiological, and ecclesiological paradigm must derive from Scripture. Only such ultimate divine governance pervasively employed will guide us properly. In examining IM, the SCIM therefore seeks to rely wholly on biblical authority, with a view to an analysis that faithfully engages the matters at hand according to divine revelation. The Presbyterian Church in America’s confessional standards (the Westminster Confession of Faith, Westminster Larger Catechism, and Westminster Shorter Catechism) aid this process, serving as subordinate authoritative guides, not in addition to Scripture but as a reliable summary of it.

“The supreme judge by which all controversies of religion are to be determined, and all decrees of councils, opinions of ancient writers, doctrines of men, and private spirits, are to be examined, and in whose sentence we rest, can be no other but the Holy Spirit speaking in Scripture.”¹³⁶ Scripture is the norma normans (norming norm); the subordinate confessional standards are the norma normata (normed norm). The SCIM’s commitment to these subordinate standards is neither blind nor uncritical, but as elders in the Presbyterian Church in America, we enthusiastically address the matters of IM according to the eminently valuable expression of the Christian faith¹³⁷ contained in these documents.¹³⁸ This analysis thereby self-consciously reflects the teaching of Scripture through the careful theological exposition contained in the PCA’s confessional standards.

The port of entry for our consideration of IM is therefore a brief but important consideration of revelation. This initial explication is not intended as an exhaustive treatment of the subject of biblical revelation, but rather serves as a narrowly focused examination with a view to its implications for biblically faithful missiology. The remainder ¹³⁷ “Now disguise it as we may, truth is dogma. Let men sneer at catechisms and creeds, as bondages and shackles, let them call them skeletons, or bones, or something more offensive still, these formularies are meant to be compilations of truth. In so far as they can be shewn to contain error, let them be amended or flung aside, but in so far as they embody truth, let them be accepted and honoured as most helpful to the Christlike life; not simply sustaining it, but also giving it stability and force; preventing it being weakened or injured by change, caprice, love of novelty, or individual self-will.” Horatius Bonar, “Religion Without Theology,” Banner of Truth 93, June 1971, pp. 38-39.

¹³⁸ For those reading this document unfamiliar with the Westminster Standards, we highly recommend reading them (Westminster Confession of Faith, Westminster Shorter Catechism, and Westminster Larger Catechism) as a starting point for working through this analysis of IM.

1 of this report will rely upon the substance and implications of this articulation of general and 2 special revelation with a view to the way in which the biblical data ought to shape missions 3 (and missiology) and the way in which the biblical data address IM.
 4

5 The decision of how to embark upon this examination of IM is not arbitrary. We 6 begin with Scripture and end with Scripture because, despite the pressure from many to 7 focus primarily (and even solely) on the phenomena of worldwide movements, only through 8 biblical and confessional lenses will IM paradigms and related matters receive helpful 9 analysis. Other tools serve good purposes when the interpretive analysis begins and ends 10 with Scripture and the extra-biblical tools submit wholly to scriptural authority. This report 11 will not engage vast numbers of cases and case studies, because the key to discerning IM 12 paradigms and methods is to address the biblical and theological understanding which drive 13 them. The task then is not an examination of the phenomena, but rather a summary 14 exposition of biblical and theological categories that facilitate doing so properly.
 15

16 The surfeit of anecdotes and reports of phenomena abound from around the Muslim 17 world and must be interpreted with attention to meticulous, gracious, and humble biblical 18 scrutiny. We expressly desire to engage the issues with theological wisdom and gospel 19 grace, incumbent upon leaders of the church, and intend that the provided 20 biblical/theological reflection facilitate more careful analysis of the phenomena.

22 2. God, His Revelation, and Human Reply

23
 24 Revelation is at the heart of historic Christianity. The principium of the Christian 25 faith, divine revelation serves as the living spring of theology, the singular source of the 26 gospel and all it embraces.¹³⁹ Such vital redemptive revelation has come, as Scripture 27 indicates, in a progressive fashion. Revelation “constitutes a part of the formation of the new 28 world of redemption, and this new world does not come into being suddenly and all at once, 29 but is realized in a long historical process. This could not be otherwise, since at every point 30 its formation proceeds on the basis of, and in contact with, the natural development of this 31 world in the form of history.”¹⁴⁰ At various times and in various ways, God has spoken to ¹³⁹ The principium essendi (principle, source of Being) and the principium cognoscendi (principle, source of knowing) are, respectively, the doctrine of God and the doctrine of Scripture. See Richard A. Muller, Post-Reformation Reformed Dogmatics: The Rise and Development of Reformed Orthodoxy, ca. 1520- ca. 1725, 4 vols. (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 1987, 2003): 1:431-36.

1 his people, with the culmination of his redemptive speech arriving in his Son (Heb. 1:1-2): 2 the Savior, Redeemer, Prophet, Priest, and King.

3 4 The Westminster Confession of Faith commences its rigorous summation of 5 Christian truth with a full-orbed expression of this Christ-centered principium cognoscendi, 6 preserved in Scripture for the redemption of God’s people. Asserting Scripture’s necessity, 7 authority, sufficiency, and clarity (WCF 1.1-10), the Confession expressly identifies the 8 substance of Scripture as Jesus Christ, the Son of God, Redeemer and Lord, the Word of 9 God incarnate (WCF 7.5; 8.6). In this revelation centered on Jesus Christ, “‘God has 10 spoken.’ This initial affirmation is . . . basic to Christian faith”¹⁴¹ and to its promulgation.

 12 a. The Divine Speech

13 14 Antecedent to human history and the redemptive revelation given in it is the 15 eternal God, who determined to create, to redeem his church, and to bring history to 16 an eternally predetermined end—the glorifying of his church in his Son (Revelation 17 21-22). The Bible takes us from the beginning, the creation of all things, including 18 the culminating creative act wherein God specially made man— male and female—19 in his image (Gen. 1:26-28; 2:20-24; WCF 4.1-2) to the end of all things (Revelation 20 21-22; WCF 32-33). Creation was not designed for perpetuation, but eventuation and 21 attainment of divine purpose;¹⁴² thus, Scripture explicitly presents an inspired 22 biblical record of redemptive acts in history according to divinely ordained 23 consummate goal (cf. Acts 2:22-24).

 25 Therefore, protology (first things) and eschatology (last things) converge in 26 divine providence, a Personal engagement that not merely holds things together, but 27 delivers them to their purposed end (Col. 1:17; Heb. 1:3).¹⁴³ God sovereignly ordains 28 all things (WCF 3), governs all things (WCF 5), and has determined from before the 29 foundation of the world (Eph. 1) by his redemptive work on the stage of history 30 (WCF 5.7) to call people to himself—people from every tribe, tongue, and nation—31 whom he makes not only a nation, but his own family (Gen. 12:3; Gal. 3-4; cf. WCF

¹⁴¹ F. F. Bruce, The Epistle to the Hebrews, Rev. ed. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990), 45.

¹⁴² So Geerhardus Vos writes, “There is an absolute end posited for the universe before and apart from sin. The universe, as created, was only a beginning, the meaning of which was not perpetuation, but attainment. The principle of God’s relation to the world from the outset was a principle of action or eventuation. The goal was not comparative (i.e., evolution); it was superlative (i.e., the final goal).” The Eschatology of the OT, ed. James T. Dennison, Jr. (Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 2001), 73.

¹⁴³ See Wayne Grudem, Systematic Theology: An Introduction to Biblical Doctrine (Leicester, England: InterVarsity; Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1994), p. 316.

1 3.6; 8.1, 5, 8; 10.1). In all these dimensions of revelation, the Son of God remains 2 central as Creator, Sustainer, Redeemer and Consummator of all things (Col. 1:15-3 20). Jesus Christ “is the Logos in an utterly unique sense: Revealer and the revelation 4 at the same time.”¹⁴⁴
 5

6 b. General and Special Revelation

7 8 This redemptive revelation, however, must not be understood in a vacuum.
 9 All created things “derive their origin from God, are to a great or lesser extent related 10 to him, and so also have the capacity to display his perfections before the eyes of his 11 creatures. Because the universe is God’s creation, it is also his revelation and self-12 manifestation. There is not an atom of the world that does not reflect his deity.”¹⁴⁵ 13 Put otherwise, “There is no thing that does not exist by his creation. All things take 14 their meaning from him. Every witness to him is a ‘prejudiced’ witness. For any fact 15 to be a fact at all, it must be a revelational fact.”¹⁴⁶ And again, succinctly, “all reality 16 reveals God.”¹⁴⁷ In other words, because the personal God has created all things, 17 these things point uniformly to him in his glorious unity and diversity. As it relates to 18 the realm of human thought, Paul puts it more particularly in view of the Son of God, 19 in whom all wisdom is hidden (Col. 2:3).
 20

21 General revelation and special revelation exist in direct continuity with one 22 another, and function in mutually dependent fashion. To be sure, special revelation 23 (Scripture) takes precedence over general revelation, and serves properly as the 24 “spectacles” (John Calvin) with which we are to interpret the world around us. That 25 being said, this special revelation occurs in the context and employs the tools of the 26 created world (the realm of general revelation) in order to deliver the truth of the 27 gospel and to open the eyes of the spiritually blind (1 Corinthians 1-2).
 28

29 When God speaks redemptively into the human context, he employs the tools 30 of human language, and by his Spirit conveys his special redemptive grace in a way 31 accessible to human cognitive and communicative capacity. In fact, the culmination

1 of his speech is a Man (John 1:14). And because of its Source, all revelation places 2 its hearers in a place of incumbent submission. “The authority of the Holy Scripture, 3 for which it ought to be believed, and obeyed, dependeth not upon the testimony of 4 any man, or Church; but wholly upon God (who is truth itself) the author therefore:
 5 and therefore it is to be received, because it is the Word of God.”¹⁴⁸ 6

7 Sourced in the Triune God, revelation then comes purposefully and 8 particularly. It also comes exclusively from the one true God. He speaks because he 9 purposes to speak, and he communicates effectively what he wants to communicate 10 (Isa. 55:10-11). In former days, God spoke through his prophets, and in the last days 11 delivers his culminating revelation (Heb. 1:1-2): the Lord Jesus Christ in his 12 efficacious suffering and glory (1 Pet. 1:10-12). The God of Scripture speaks with 13 intentionality, and his explanation of redemption arrives wholly of divine disclosure 14 – not out of human analysis. Without the special revelation of God, redemption 15 would remain hidden, unknown, and unattainable (Eph. 1:3-23; Rom. 16:25-27).¹⁴⁹

17 Divine grace comes by divine redemptive acts interpreted by God’s 18 revelatory word. “Scripture cannot conceive of pure religion without supernatural 19 revelation.”¹⁵⁰ The meaning of redemption, while shaped by its historical context, 20 cannot be reduced to human reflection on divine acts.¹⁵¹ Scripture comes not as mere 21 human witness and testimony to divine redemptive activity, but as a Spirit-given 22 word to God’s people (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:19-21), explaining the meaning of the 23 death and resurrection of Jesus Christ—anticipated, accomplished, and applied.¹⁵² 24 Scripture is God’s word.
 25

26 c. Life as Religious Reply

27 Scripture unequivocally affirms one God as the single Source for necessary, 28 sufficient, and authoritative speech. God the Creator and God the Redeemer is God

1 the Speaker. This God, the triune God of Scripture, has spoken redemptively; this 2 same God has spoken unceasingly in all that he has made (Psa. 19:1-6; Rom. 1:18-21), 3 and the external testifying voice of creation itself joins the internal voice of God 4 inside mankind to establish comprehensive accountability for all peoples of all times.
 5 In other words, humans converse with the God of creation, the very one who is also 6 the redeeming God of Scripture. The extraordinary, redemptive revelation of God 7 enters an environment of perpetual general revelatory speech and providence of God, 8 and in a world in which every human lives in inescapable dialogue with the Creator 9 (Psa. 19:1-6; Rom. 1:18-32).

 11 In short, God speaks; humans hear and listen. And as will be more fully 12 expounded below, trust in his perspicuous and authoritative revelation distinguishes 13 belief from unbelief, true worship from false worship, true religion from false 14 religion, and the regenerate from the unregenerate. Human life functions coram Deo, 15 making all of life a reply to revelation.¹⁵³ Worship then is not an optional or 16 additional feature of human life; rather, human life itself is an act of worship. Man is 17 an irreducibly religious creature.

18 19 To put it otherwise, all of life is religious because all of life is lived before the 20 Sovereign Lord (coram Deo) and is to be lived for the Sovereign Lord (pro Deo).
 21 There is no aspect of human thought, word, or action that exists outside of the sphere 22 of covenantal/religious obligation, making all human experience—priorities and 23 practices, customs and mores, language and community—matters of personal 24 account before the Triune God. “And no creature is hidden from his sight, but all are 25 naked and exposed to the eyes of him to whom we must give account” (Heb. 4:13).

26
 27 Accordingly, true religion is not properly a human creation, but a divinely 28 prescribed, covenantal response to the one true God.¹⁵⁴ “All peoples either 29 pantheistically pull God down into what is creaturely, or deistically elevate him 30 endlessly above it. In neither case does one arrive at true fellowship, at covenant, at 31 genuine religion.”¹⁵⁵ As revealed by the God of Scripture, genuine religion comes by 32 unqualified allegiance to the God of the covenant, by wholehearted reliance upon and 33 application of his Word (cf. Dan. 3:1-18). God’s speech is necessary to explain the 1 appropriate response (WCF 1.1), and dependence on any other source constitutes 2 idolatry.

3 True religion is characterized not only by intellectual or verbal allegiance to 4 the one God of revelation but also by a functioning moral and religious trust in his 5 Word. The first commandment compels worship of the true God; the second 6 commandment compels submissive religious practice according the revelation of the 7 one true God. “The enduring moral norm of the second commandment necessitates 8 that true worship conform to the regulative principle.”¹⁵⁶ True faith and true religion 9 prove themselves by demonstrably “sympathetic absorption”¹⁵⁷ in the revelation of 10 God. Full receptivity and obedience to the speaking God evidence proper 11 dependence.

13 Christians must not only confess the foundational role of Scripture. They 14 must also actually engage in the systematic study of Scripture to ensure that biblical 15 truth permeates and adequately informs academic endeavors, including cultural 16 anthropology, sociology, and other social sciences which analyze peoples and 17 societies. Biblical categories, definitions, directives and insights should 18 comprehensively shape all missions. Social sciences and the biblically informed 19 interpretation of them play a valuable role in support of the teaching of Scripture.
20 Employed under the authority of Scripture, sociological analyses and cultural 21 anthropological studies can serve as important, even mandatory supplements to 22 missions. They ought never become the center of missions.

23
24 To conclude our concerns here, we affirm that Scripture speaks 25 authoritatively into all cultures, all peoples, at all times. While the Bible speaks to all 26 things, it does not speak about all things. Analyzing general revelation, academic 27 endeavors can enhance the work of the church in the proclamation of the gospel 28 around the world. Because of the noetic effects of sin, theological neutrality of 29 academic constructs is impossible, and all analysis, including that of the social 30 sciences, must submit to the functional interpretive authority of Scripture. In view of Duncan continues helpfully, “[T]he elements of worship must be instituted by God himself, the forms in which those elements are performed must not be inimical to the nature of content of the element or draw attention away from the substance and goal of worship, and the circumstances of worship must never overshadow or detract from the elements, but rather discreetly foster the work of the means of grace.” Ibid., pp. 55-56.

1 that all-important Scriptural revelation, it is incumbent upon the Church to receive 2 that divine revelation according to the interpretive guides of Scripture itself. “The 3 infallible rule of interpretation of Scripture is the Scripture itself: and therefore, when 4 there is a question about the true and full sense of any Scripture (which is not 5 manifold, but one), it must be searched and known by other places that speak more 6 clearly.”¹⁵⁸ With an eye to the whole counsel of God, we turn now to matters of 7 faithful and consistent biblical interpretation.

8

9 3. Hermeneutics & Exegesis

10

11 a. Introduction

12 In no small measure, discussions concerning IM paradigms are 13 fundamentally hermeneutical in character. That is to say, they inevitably turn one to 14 the question, “What are the principles by which we interpret the Bible?” While one 15 must take care not to draw unfounded generalizations, certain patterns emerge in IM 16 readings and applications of the Scripture. After reflecting on the hermeneutical 17 principles of one leading IM proponent, we will consider one text whose 18 interpretation surfaces frequently in IM literature—the Jerusalem Council of Acts 15.

19

20 b. IM and Hermeneutics

21

22 IM proponents typically recognize that the events of the first century 23 represent “a unique point in history” and that “such events will never be repeated.”¹⁵⁹ 24 Rebecca Lewis, for instance, correctly perceives the gospel as a realization of the 25 Hebrew Scriptures:

26

27 Since circumcision was the sign of the covenant God had made with 28 Abraham, and Pentecost was the celebration of the giving of the law on 29 stone tablets to Moses, the gospel as a new covenant, and the coming of 30 the Holy Spirit at Pentecost, were the fulfillment, not the abrogation, of 31 all God’s covenant promises in the Hebrew Scriptures.¹⁶⁰

32

33 IM proponents therefore appreciate both the organic and the redemptive-34 historical character of biblical revelation. However, that perspective finds at best an 35 incomplete application when prominent IM proponents put forward their

1 interpretations of the Bible. This point is evident in the hermeneutical reflections of 2 Rebecca Lewis.¹⁶¹ Lewis argues that the “gospel message” itself has “unchanging 3 content” that the church must “proclaim in all contexts.”¹⁶² She acknowledges that 4 the gospel was “proclaimed ... to Abraham,” and presumably to generations of 5 Jewish persons thereafter.¹⁶³ She expresses concern, however, that one not add to 6 this unchanging gospel “additional requirements such as adherence to Christian 7 religious traditions.”¹⁶⁴ To do so will “cloud or encumber the gospel.”¹⁶⁵ Such a 8 generalization, while containing truth in the abstract, must ultimately be assessed in 9 terms of what are alleged to be the Christian religious traditions said to encumber the 10 gospel.

12 Lewis’ distinction between the gospel and the accretion of religious tradition 13 helps us to understand her analysis of the progress of the gospel during the New 14 Testament period. Jewish believers in Christ during the first century were “saved by 15 faith in Christ and disciplined through the God-given Jewish religious framework 16 within which all the disciples lived.”¹⁶⁶ In the NT age, the gospel’s unchanging 17 content came to these Jewish people in their context first, a context of religious 18 practice that was ethnically their own.

20 What happened when the gospel went to non-Jews? Jesus, Lewis argues, did 21 not “require [Samaritans] to become proselytes or to come to the Jewish temple or 22 synagogues.”¹⁶⁷ In fact, she claims, “Jesus affirms this non-Jewish version of faith in 23 himself as ‘the kind of worshippers the Father seeks’ (John 4:24).” The Samaritans 24 embraced the gospel but Jesus did not require them to “enter the Jewish religious 25 framework,” a pattern repeated in the subsequent ministries of Peter and Philip in 26 Samaria (Acts 8).¹⁶⁸

28 This pattern continued as the gospel extended beyond Samaria to Gentiles.
29 Peter learned that God did not require Cornelius or other Gentile believers to “adopt 30 Jewish identity” or to “accept [a Jewish] religious framework” or “the religious 1 traditions of the church in Jerusalem.”¹⁶⁹ The church ratified this understanding of 2 the gospel’s relation to Jewish identity at the Jerusalem Council, to which we will 3 give further attention below. Lewis understands Paul’s statements on circumcision 4 along these very lines. Paul’s argument in Romans 4, she argues, makes the case that 5 “God ... want[s] Gentile believers to set aside the religious framework He had 6 established for the Jews.”¹⁷⁰ In fact the epistle to the Romans as a whole shows that 7 “the gospel itself, apart from all the God-given traditions of the Jews, ... brings the 8 transformation of obedient faith into the life of believers from any background.”¹⁷¹ 9 This understanding of the gospel—a gospel for the Gentiles and shed of its 10 accompanying Jewish form—is precisely what Paul has in mind when he speaks of 11 the “mystery” that he proclaims (Eph. 3:6-9).¹⁷² Lewis applies these principles to the 12 contemporary church:

14 Likewise, it is disturbing today for Christians who value their religious 15 traditions, to see believers arising in other cultural contexts set these aside 16 as optional or inappropriate for their context. The message of inclusion is 17 good news to us also as long as we are the Gentiles getting included. It 18 starts to get more difficult to accept when we recognize that we are now 19 in the position of these Jewish believers, with 2000 years of our own 20 valuable teachings and traditions that we want everyone to build on.¹⁷³

22 The application is plain. Twenty-first century Western Christians are in loco 23 Judaeorum—in the very place and situation that Jews, and potentially, Judaizers—24 occupied in the first century. Paul’s arguments against imposing Jewish practices 25 upon Gentile believers mean that “a simple gospel” and “a simple faith” in that 26 gospel are sufficient for all believers to provide “guidance for mature 27 discipleship.”¹⁷⁴ “A religious framework drawn from historical Christianity” is 28 simply not necessary.¹⁷⁵ Put more strongly, “if we demand that all believers adopt 29 our own religious traditions and identity, then we are actually undermining the 30 integrity of the gospel.”¹⁷⁶

32 Just as in the first century “there were in existence at least two radically 33 different religions based on Jesus Christ,” the “Jewish version” and the “Greco-

1 Roman version,” so today believers may “belong to Muslim or Hindu cultures and 2 ... not adopt the religious forms and traditions we have constructed over time and ...
3 not even take on a ‘Christian’ identity.”¹⁷⁷ People may truly believe in Christ “while 4 preserving distinct cultural identities” and evidence “radically different expressions 5 of faith in Christ.”¹⁷⁸

7 These principles help us to understand the Judaizing heresy. Lewis agrees 8 that “the Judaizers were not preaching a gospel of salvation by grace through faith in 9 Jesus Christ alone.”¹⁷⁹ She does not identify their teaching in terms of a system of 10 meritorious works simpliciter. Rather, “they were adding the requirement of 11 religious conversion (change of outward forms and religious identity) to the inner 12 transformation, implying that the work of the Holy Spirit is not sufficient by 13 itself.”¹⁸⁰ The Galatian heresy, therefore, was heretical in no small measure because 14 it sought to impose a specific and finite religious form and identity upon individuals 15 from an altogether different culture.
16

17 What are we to make of Lewis’s account of the New Testament and of the 18 application of her findings to the contemporary church? Lewis recognizes that the 19 Old Covenant system was “God-given” and therefore theological in its origin and 20 nature. Her prevailing and working understanding of that system, however, is 21 sociological. She understands that system in parity with other cultural or religious 22 systems, whether they are Greco-Roman from the first century, or Muslim or Hindu 23 from the twenty-first century.
24

25 When the New Testament articulates the reasons that Gentile Christians are 26 not bound to observe peculiarly Old Covenant forms and practices, it pursues two 27 very different courses than Lewis’ arguments. The first course of argument is 28 redemptive-historical in nature. In Galatians 3-4, Paul argues that the incarnation of 29 Christ, and the era of the Spirit inaugurated in him, ends the Old Covenant era (Gal.
30 3:22,23,25). The Old Covenant had inherent, intended obsolescence. It had a 31 beginning point (Gal. 3:17,19), a terminal point (Gal. 3:19), and specific redemptive-32 historical purposes for its limited duration (Gal. 3:19-22). Hebrews advances a 33 similar and lengthier case. The New Covenant is “better” and “more excellent” than 34 the Old Covenant (Heb. 8:6). In the dawn of the New, writes the author to his first

1 century audience, the Old is “becoming obsolete and growing old ... ready to vanish 2 away” (Heb. 8:8).

4 The other argument is soteriological. Paul’s opponents in Galatia (the 5 ‘Judaizers’) were pressing circumcision and the other ordinances of the Mosaic Law 6 (see Gal. 4:10, 5:3) as grounds of the Christian’s justification (Gal. 2:15-16; cf. Acts 7 15:1, 5). In other words, the believer was to be justified not by faith alone, but by 8 faith plus obedience to the Mosaic Law. Paul vehemently resists such a teaching and 9 argues at length in both Galatians and Romans (Gal. 3, Rom. 4) that such a teaching 10 was contrary to the Old Testament itself. The observance of circumcision for 11 justification, then, had no sanction whatsoever from Old Covenant revelation.
12

13 Two implications follow from these arguments. First, the New Testament 14 does not object to the imposition of the Mosaic ordinances upon Gentiles on the 15 grounds that such an action illegitimately requires Gentiles to adopt foreign or non-16 native cultural forms. The New Testament’s concern, rather, is redemptive-historical 17 and soteriological. To be sure, Lewis acknowledges that Acts 15 addresses 18 soteriological questions. The New Testament, however, does not articulate the kind 19 of cultural arguments that Lewis has advanced from this passage.
20

21 Second, one may not legitimately establish a direct link between the 22 imposition of some Jewish forms on Gentiles in the first century and the imposition 23 of what are said to be Western Christian forms on non-Western Christians in the 24 twenty-first century. There are undoubtedly instances of such improper imposition in 25 the church and world today, but the first century and twenty-first century situations 26 described by Lewis are not analogous in the manner that she suggests. The New 27 Testament documents a unique, unrepeatable, and non-episodic period in redemptive 28 history—the overlap between the dawn of the New Covenant at the resurrection of 29 Jesus and at Pentecost, and the continuation of the Mosaic system among the Jews 30 (formally ended at the resurrection) until the Roman destruction of the Temple in AD 31 70. By definition, the precise circumstances addressed by the apostles in Acts and in 32 such letters as Galatians and Romans are peculiar to the first century, and therefore 33 are sui generis. This is not to say that New Testament principles, properly 34 understood and articulated, are without meaning and application to the contemporary 35 church. It is to say that one must fully and consistently appreciate the redemptive-36 historical significance of the first century context before attempting to determine that 37 meaning and to draw those applications. Such appreciation is not easy to find in the 38 writings of IM proponents, a fact that is not without consequence for their exegesis 39 of Scripture.
40

1 c. An Exegetical Example – Acts 15

2
3 One can see these hermeneutical principles at work exegetically in a passage 4 widely regarded by IM proponents as important to their understanding of the New 5 Testament and of IM methodology—Acts 15.¹⁸¹ Acts 15 affords what Dudley 6 Woodberry has termed an “incarnational model”—an exemplar of handling a 7 “missiological problem that resulted from the gospel crossing a cultural barrier.”¹⁸² 8 What are some of the ways in which IM proponents understand this passage to guide 9 the contemporary church?

10 11 Woodberry argues that Paul and Barnabas’ reports of their missionary 12 endeavors (15:3-4, 8-9, 12, cf. v. 14) legitimate the appropriation of current “case 13 studies of insider movements in a number of regions in Asia and Africa that 14 demonstrate how God is working...”¹⁸³ Peter’s speech (15:7,10) is said to warrant a 15 call to “incarnate the gospel in the Muslim community.”¹⁸⁴ The criteria of the 16 Council to adjudicate the question—“their own reasoning along with the guidance of 17 God’s Spirit”—means that today we may “apply reason to the present discussion 18 [and therefore] see reasons for and reasons against insider movements of disciples of 19 Christ within the Muslim community.”¹⁸⁵ Scripture also plays an important role, as 20 in the quotation from Amos 9 in Acts 15:15-17, and Woodberry understands both the 21 Old and New Testaments to afford examples of Insider Movements, even as the New 22 Testament “gives some warnings to some believers who have remained under the 23 umbrella of their original faith.”¹⁸⁶

25 Most critically, Woodberry directly applies the decision of the Council to 26 professing Christians in Muslim contexts. The Council determined that 27 “circumcision was not necessary [for] salvation,” and then proceeded to address 28 questions of “fellowship and morality.”¹⁸⁷ For the contemporary situation, this 29 means that, “There is freedom to observe the Law or not to do so, since salvation 30 does not come through the Law. But because relationships and fellowship are so

1 important, the disciples of Christ should not use their freedom in a way that might 2 unnecessarily hinder their relationships with Muslims or traditional Christians.”¹⁸⁸ 3

4 Lewis argues that the Council's chief concern was, “Is conversion to the 5 identity and religious traditions of the Jewish believers necessary for salvation for 6 those coming out of Greek pagan background?”¹⁸⁹ Peter’s words in Acts 15:8-11 7 show us the Council’s conclusion that “the gospel ... save[s] believers who retain 8 their Gentile culture and integrity.”¹⁹⁰ Therefore, since God by his Spirit 9 demonstrated that he had “accept[ed] the Gentile believers,” the church could not 10 “add on to [the Gentiles'] faith in Christ a requirement of conversion to the Jewish 11 religious forms.”¹⁹¹ The four commands of Acts 15:20 were given “to promote a 12 peaceful co-existence between Jewish and Greek believers,” but “all of these laws, 13 except the last one, were removed before the end of the New Testament by Paul, who 14 reduced them to a matter of conscience.”¹⁹² Thus, Ridgeway concludes, “the Gentiles 15 were free to remain insiders in their own ethnic communities and as a consequence 16 the gospel could freely travel along natural ethnic lines.”¹⁹³ 17

18 What are we to make of these readings of Acts 15? In keeping with the 19 hermeneutical principles surveyed above, they equate first century Jewish practices 20 with contemporary, non-Jewish cultural forms. This approach misses the redemptive-21 historical and soteriological import both of the Mosaic practices in question and of 22 the proceedings of the Council itself. The Council takes up two distinct questions, 23 one soteriological and one redemptive-historical. The first question is whether 24 circumcision is a necessary requirement for salvation (15:1, 5). In answer to this 25 question, the Council decisively answers in the negative (cf. 15:24, 25-26). The second 26 question concerns the terms of fellowship for Jewish and Gentile Christians within 27 the church, and particularly within the same congregations. It is too strong to call the 28 Council’s four provisions “laws,” as Lewis does. To term these “laws” suggests 29 either that the ceremonies of the Mosaic legislation are partially or completely 30 normative in the New Covenant period (something the New Testament disavows—31 Gal. 3:23-25), or that church councils have a legislative power to determine matters 32 of the church’s faith and practice (something that the New Testament also disavows

1 – I Pet. 5:3; 2 Cor. 1:24). Paul’s counsel in Romans 14-15 and 1 Corinthians 8 and 10, 2 therefore, is not at all inconsistent with the Council’s decision.

3 In summary, Acts 15 documents a decisive moment in redemptive history. In 4 doing so, it reflects Luke’s broader redemptive historical concerns in Acts. In Acts, 5 Luke is charting the epochal progress of the gospel from Jerusalem to Judea and 6 Samaria to the ends of the earth (Acts 1:8). As Richard B. Gaffin, Jr. has observed of 7 Acts 1:8, “[this text] is not addressed indiscriminately to all believers, regardless of 8 time and place, but directly only to the apostles ... and concerns the foundational 9 task of bringing the gospel from Jerusalem to Rome completed by them (cf. Col.
10 1:6,23).”¹⁹⁴

12 How does Acts 15 fit into Luke’s account of the redemptive-historical 13 advance of the gospel? The account of the Council follows the conclusion of the first 14 round of Paul and Barnabas’ Gentile mission (13:1-14:28), and precedes the 15 continued penetration of the gospel to Gentile territories (16:1-5). The significance 16 of the Council is fundamentally redemptive-historical and soteriological. It is 17 redemptive-historical in that the church is coming to terms with the implications of 18 the conclusion of the former Mosaic era and the regulations peculiar to it, and of the 19 dawn of the new era marked by the exaltation of the risen Christ and the consequent 20 outpouring of the Spirit on all flesh. It is soteriological in that the church brings 21 clarity to the gospel that she proclaims—is the sinner justified by faith alone or by 22 faith plus works done in obedience to the Law?¹⁹⁵

24 It is therefore mistaken to understand the Council primarily in terms of the 25 retention or exchange of social and religious identity. Such an understanding 26 conceives too close a relationship between the redemptive-historical circumstances 27 that occasioned the Council and the sorts of contemporary cultural issues and 28 concerns that IM proponents bring to Acts 15. The result is that IM readings pose 29 questions to Acts 15 that Luke was not concerned to ask, and derive principles from 30 the Council that lack sufficient exegetical warrant. Cultural presuppositions of many 31 IM interpreters blind them to hegemonic hermeneutical and theological factors;

¹⁹⁴ Richard B. Gaffin, Jr., Pentecost: Studies in New Testament Teaching on the Gifts of the Holy Spirit (Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 1979), pp. 23-4, emphasis in original. Gaffin helpfully goes on to speak of the way in which this verse (and Acts as a whole) relates to the mission of the contemporary church, “[Acts 1:8] does apply today, but only derivatively, as we build on the apostolic foundation and hold fast to their foundational gospel witness. Where this is not grasped, one result is an unintentional, but common, misuse of the verse. Most assuredly the local congregation, or any other larger or smaller locale in the Western world serving as a base for contemporary missionary activity, is not ‘Jerusalem’! Rather we today are part of the ‘ends of the earth’ reached by the gospel in the period beyond its foundational spread,” ibid., p. 24.

¹⁹⁵ Here is an important point of application of Acts 15 to the contemporary church.

1 reading cultural relativism into a biblical context, they unavoidably draw 2 contemporary cultural relativism out of it.

3 4 d. The Ministry of the Holy Spirit

5
6 A seminal feature of IM argumentation is its analysis of field phenomena.
7 Analysts assess reports of movements on the field, interpreting both Scripture and 8 the contemporary missional context to determine how these reportedly spontaneous 9 movements parallel the events of the New Testament age. It is important to note that 10 reports of dreams and visions and other phenomena have a long history in missions 11 to Muslims, predating the advent of IM. Though anecdotes do travel through 12 informal viral networks, the reports which IM advocates and other missiologists 13 attend consist of more sophisticated statistical research and analysis.

14
15 [Dudley] Woodberry et al. have collected approximately 750 questionnaires 16 from Muslim background believers (MBBs) from thirty countries and 17 fifty ethnic groups focusing on their reasons for following Christ. The 18 findings indicated that dreams and visions were an important factor in 19 their decision to follow Jesus with 27 percent having a dream or vision 20 before they accepted Jesus, 40 percent at the time of accepting Jesus and 21 45 percent after they had accepted Jesus.¹⁹⁶

23 Missiologists, including those sympathetic to IM, have assimilated, 24 examined, and quantified such reports of dreams, signs and wonders, and have 25 discerned particular patterns from their interpretation of the data. Having just 26 considered the hermeneutical approach which manifests itself in IM writings, we 27 turn now to consider IM interpretations of these field phenomena—a matter which 28 directly concerns the doctrine of the Holy Spirit.

29 30 Among dozens of other biblical texts, the two key passages in the New 31 Testament concerning the nature of the Bible emphatically build an inextricable tie 32 between the Word of God and the Holy Spirit. In 2 Tim. 3:16, Paul commends 33 Timothy to trust in the Scriptures because of what they are—the theopneustos 34 writings. Using this hapax legomenon,¹⁹⁷ Paul commends Holy Scripture as that 35 which is literally breathed (spirited) out by God. The words of Scripture are divine, ¹⁹⁶ John Travis and Anna Travis, “Factors Affecting the Identity That Jesus-Followers Choose,” in From Seed to Fruit: Global Trends, Fruitful Practices, and Emerging Issues among Muslims, ed. J. Dudley Woodberry, 2nd ed. (Pasadena, CA: William Carey Library, 2011), p. 186, fn. 179.

¹⁹⁷ A hapax legomenon is a word, like theopneustos, which appears only once in the New Testament (2 Tim 3:16). For further discussion of theopneustos, see Edwin A. Blum, “The Apostles’ View of Scripture,” in Inerrancy, ed. Norman L. Geisler (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1980), pp. 44-48.

1 as they come directly by the Spirit of God. “To say that Scripture is spirated, to say
2 that it is the Word of God, means that God has spoken it. All of it.”¹⁹⁸

3 Similarly, the apostle Peter (2 Pet. 1:19-21) contends for the supreme reliability 4 of the inscripturated Word of God precisely because it is the product of the Holy 5 Spirit:

6 7 And we have the prophetic word more fully confirmed, to which you will 8 do well to pay attention as to a lamp shining in a dark place, until the day 9 dawns and the morning star rises in your hearts, knowing this first of all, 10 that no prophecy of Scripture comes from someone's own interpretation. For 11 no prophecy was ever produced by the will of man, but men spoke from 12 God as they were carried along by the Holy Spirit.

13 14 In short, the prophetic Word—the Scriptures—are the Word of God, the 15 product of the Holy Spirit. To speak of the Word of God is to speak of the Word of 16 the Spirit, and to speak of this Spirit of truth (e.g., John 14; 16) is to speak of the 17 Spirit’s inseparability from the Scriptures.

18 19 In addition, Scripture proclaims its own Christ-centeredness. From start to 20 finish, the Bible in the Old and New Testaments, is about the Son of God—21 humiliated and exalted (cf. 1 Pet. 1:10-12). It is these Spirit-Authored Scriptures that 22 point singularly to Jesus Christ, and for this reason, Jesus said of the Helper, the 23 Spirit, “He will glorify me, for he will take what is mine and declare it to you” (John 24 16:14; cf. Rom. 8:9; 1 Cor. 15:45; John 14:26). “The Holy Spirit . . . follows Christ 25 in his journey through history. He binds himself to the word of Christ and works 26 only in the name, and in accordance with the command, of Christ.”¹⁹⁹ Of course, as 27 God, the Spirit is wholly sovereign and has the right and ability to work as he wills 28 (John 3:8). Yet the Spirit’s work never strays from this explicit Christ-disclosing 29 function, convicting of sin (John 14), sealing redemptive truths in the heart of 30 believers (Ephesians 1).

31 32 The Spirit of God is the Spirit of Christ. Him alone the Spirit exalts and by 33 work with his Word, he effects regeneration, enabling men and women to see Jesus 34 Christ for who he is—dead, buried and resurrected for the forgiveness of their sins.
35 The Spirit unceasingly shines his light upon the Son of God, and taking his own 36 Word (cf. 2 Tim. 3:16-17; 2 Pet. 1:19-21), “removes the veil of misunderstanding

1 and enables a man to understand the Scriptures (2 Cor. 3:14-18).”²⁰⁰ As Scripture
 2 itself reveals, this self-effacing and Christ-exalting ministry of the Holy Spirit bears 3 directly on his application of redemption in the contemporary contexts around the 4 world. The sweeping implications of these Scriptural features bear directly, as we 5 will see, upon the analysis of the contemporary field phenomena.
 6

7 The Westminster Standards richly describe the biblical contours of God’s 8 work in history. As he works in the world, “God, in His ordinary providence maketh 9 use of means” (WCF 5.3). The notion of “ordinary” surely implies the possibility of 10 that which is extraordinary, and WCF 5.3 makes that point overtly: “yet [God] is 11 free to work without, above, and against [ordinary means], at His pleasure.” At the 12 center of God’s work is redeeming people for himself. Inviting and drawing people 13 to Jesus Christ, God employs “his Word and Spirit” (WLC 67; cf. WLC 72) to bring 14 them to faith and repentance, “savingly enlightening their minds, renewing and 15 powerfully determining their wills, so as they (although in themselves dead in sin) 16 are hereby made willing and able freely to answer his call, and to accept and 17 embrace the grace offered and conveyed therein” (WLC 67). In other words, God’s 18 “outward and ordinary means” (WLC 154) for conferring the redeeming work of 19 Christ upon sinners is by his Spirit, who “maketh the reading, but especially the 20 preaching of the Word, an effectual means” (WLC 155) of conversion.
 21

22 John Calvin, “preeminently the theologian of the Holy Spirit,”²⁰¹ captured the 23 Word/Spirit inseparability with pastoral poignancy. “Therefore the Spirit, promised 24 to us, has not the task of inventing new and unheard-of revelations, or of forging a 25 new kind of doctrine, to lead us away from the received doctrine of the gospel, but of 26 sealing our minds with that very doctrine which is commended by the gospel.”²⁰² Far 27 from restricting the Spirit’s ministry, the self-binding of the Spirit frees him to work 28 according to divine purpose—that redemption-applying, Christ-centered purpose 29 revealed in Scripture. So Calvin admonishes, “It is no ignominy for the Spirit to be in 30 conformity with himself.”²⁰³ Or again, as Richard Gaffin puts it so well, “The Bible 31 is the living voice of the Holy Spirit today. This is the structure or pattern of working 32 which the Spirit has set for himself in his sovereign freedom.”²⁰⁴

1 Some still cry foul—that such a view of the Spirit rigidly defies the freedom 2 of the Spirit to work sovereignly, unexpectedly, and extraordinarily. But as the 3 Author of Scripture, the Spirit himself reveals his own functioning and perspicuously 4 (and intentionally!) establishes the parameters of his own work. Ironically, it is those 5 who interpret as divine other extra-biblical or even at times non-biblical 6 manifestations of the Spirit that constrain him in their own theological trappings. The 7 Spirit’s freedom is divine, and divine revelation is the free manifestation of the Spirit 8 of God about the work of God in redemption; the riches of grace in the application of 9 Christ’s redemptive work could hardly be described properly as constraint. Concerning 10 this Spirit’s self-bounded freedom, Gaffin also winsomely and artfully addresses oft-11 articulated rebuttals:

12 13 People sometimes tell me, “You’re putting the Holy Spirit in a box.” At 14 least two responses come to mind. First, I do take this charge to heart. It 15 is by no means an imaginary danger that we might unduly limit our 16 expectations of the Spirit’s work by our theologizing. We must always 17 remember the incalculability factor that Jesus notes in John 3:8 (the Spirit 18 is like an unpredictable wind). Any sound doctrine of the Spirit’s work 19 will be content with an unaccounted-for remainder, an area of mystery.

20
21 Secondly ... the Holy Spirit himself, “speaking in the Scripture” 22 (Westminster Confession of Faith, 1.10), puts his activity “in a box,” if 23 you will—a box of his own sovereign making. The Bible knows nothing 24 of a pure whimsy of the Spirit.”²⁰⁵

25
26 IM advocates seem to view matters according to a different theological 27 construction. While a continuationist²⁰⁶ theology of the Holy Spirit is not always 28 explicit, written documents by IM advocates, SCIM interviews, and anecdotes attest 29 to the IM patterns of interpreting the phenomena as the extra-ordinary ministry of the 30 Holy Spirit. “Over the past half century, many Hindus, Muslims, and other peoples 31 of the major religions have put their faith in Jesus, often as a result of miraculous

²⁰⁶ Briefly put, continuationists believe that God not only continues to do miracles today in a manner that parallels the first century, but that he also still invests men with miraculous gifts such as those seen for instance in Acts 3:1-10 and 11:28. Cessationists understand such gifts as limited to the Apostolic age. Soft cessationism recognizes these critical redemptive-historical distinctions, and simultaneously recognizes the mysterious nature of the Spirit’s work (John 3). For discussion of related issues, see the 2nd PCA General Assembly’s “A Pastoral Letter Concerning the Experience of the Holy Spirit in the Church Today” (1975), <http://www.pcahistory.org/documents/pastoralleter.html> (accessed January 24, 2013). See also Gaffin, Perspectives on Pentecost, op cit.

1 encounters with God through dreams, healings, or the reading of Scripture.”²⁰⁷ In 2 such fashion, IM writings profile the vast numbers of former Muslims becoming 3 followers of Jesus, in conjunction with personal supernatural experiences, including 4 reported visions of Jesus Christ.
 5

6 Whether the extraordinary events described spread across individual lives 7 with singular or multiple occurrences, the interpretive prominence and affirmation 8 given this data raise a few considerations. First, rendering a common place 9 interpretation of the phenomena fails to distinguish properly the first and twenty-first 10 centuries, and perpetuates the less than careful assumption that what the Holy Spirit 11 did in Acts is what he is doing now. We surely would affirm with continuationists, 12 IM advocates and others, that the Spirit can and does act in extraordinary ways, and 13 eagerly assert his sovereign right to do so. Yet the eschatologically unrepeatable 14 period that characterized the first century AD frames the Holy Spirit’s work then as 15 historically inimitable. “In Luke-Acts ... Pentecost is portrayed as a redemptive-16 historical event. It is not primarily to be interpreted existentially and pneumatologically, 17 but eschatologically and Christologically. By its very nature it shares in the decisive 18 once-for-all character of the entire Christ-event (Jesus’ death, resurrection, and 19 ascension).”²⁰⁸ The Holy Spirit is the eschatological Spirit whose work corresponds 20 uniquely to the once-for-all and cosmically significant redemptive work of Christ.
 21 Thus, in keeping with the hermeneutical analysis above, the redemptive-historically 22 unique character of the first century makes any normalizing interpretation of the 23 Spirit’s work strained, both in the biblical and the contemporary contexts.
 24

25 Second, such phenomenological analysis can effect a truncation (and in some 26 cases, even an eclipse) of the strong biblical teaching on the Spirit of Christ. Though 27 some IM advocates do recognize a vital connection between Scripture and the Holy ²⁰⁷ Travis, “Why Evangelicals Should Be Thankful,” op. cit. This article repeats Travis’ earlier framing of the same conclusion, “As many have noted, this call of God [to follow Jesus] often comes about in part through dreams, visions, miraculous answers to prayer, and personal study of the Injil (the New Testament).” Travis, “Factors,” 186. The cover article in the January-February 2013 issue of Christianity Today profiled a man who came to faith in Isa al-masih (Arabic for “Jesus the Messiah”) after an experience in his home where “macaroni multiplied” and provided sufficient food for his wife, him, and a guest. The same night he had a dream: “Isa came to me and asked me, ‘Do you know who multiplied the macaroni?’ I said, ‘I don’t know.’ He said, ‘I am Isa al Masih. If you follow me, not only the macaroni but your life will be multiplied...’ He didn’t tell me that he was God; he didn’t tell me that he died on behalf of me; he didn’t say, ‘I am the Son of God.’ He didn’t talk to me about any complicated theological issues. He only told me that if I followed him, he would multiply my life. At that time, I was very happy if he only multiplied the macaroni like he did that day. I didn’t understand what he meant when he said that my life would be multiplied. Now I understand what that means. But at that time, I accepted him simply as the ‘lord of macaroni.’” Daniels, “Worshiping Jesus in the Mosque,” op. cit.

²⁰⁸ Sinclair B. Ferguson, The Holy Spirit, Contours of Christian Theology (Downers Grove, IL: InterVarsity, 1996), 82.

1 Spirit, and as seen already have written about the Spirit’s work, the IM theology of 2 the Holy Spirit in initial drawing and conversion can lose its explicit, biblically-3 framed Christological coordinates.²⁰⁹ “The post-Pentecost activity of the Spirit ...
 4 spreads through history like concentric ripples in a pool. As in the Old Testament 5 era, so in the New, his activity is soteriological, communal, cosmic and eschatological, 6 and involves the transformation of the individual, the governing of the church and 7 the world, and the bringing in of the new age.”²¹⁰ The Spirit’s work in peoples’ lives 8 is biblically descript, and as such, unwaveringly concerns union with Christ and 9 communion with him and his people.²¹¹ Both the reported phenomena themselves 10 and the fruit of the phenomena need to be assessed before the teaching of Scripture 11 concerning the gospel, conversion, the church, the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ 12 and the biblically-parameterized, Christ-centered work of the Holy Spirit.
 13

14 Third, a risk of extrapolation also arises. When IM advocates interpret reports 15 of dreams and visions as the work of the Holy Spirit, they become vulnerable to 16 extending divine affirmation to IM activities and methods more broadly. Even if 17 interpretations of certain phenomena are accurate, blanket approval is a non sequitur.
 18 Proper discernment about all phenomena and practices, whether IM or not, will come 19 only by discerning, scripturally-grounded analysis. “Even when our judgment falters, 20 God’s word remains God’s word, deserving reverent exposition and responsive 21 hearing. The authority lies in the Scriptures themselves, not in our mental 22 impressions.”²¹² Such a warning extends not only to those with private interpretations 23 of phenomena, but even to missiologists who would interpret the reports and 24 extrapolate from them. One’s theological orientation directly affects interpretive 25 decisions—both of Scripture and of contemporary phenomena. Of course, the Lord 26 of the harvest alone knows those who are his and those who are not, and in our state

²⁰⁹ Again, redemptive history in its biblical contours carries interpretive prominence here. The Holy Spirit is the Spirit of the resurrected Christ, associating his ministry in the first century with the once-for-all nature of Christ’s redemptive work—life, death, and resurrection. Thus, the work of the Spirit in the first century must be understood according to the once-for-all events in the life of Jesus Christ. As 1 Cor. 15:45 makes clear, Jesus Christ himself becomes life-giving Spirit—a fact which manifests the inseparability of the resurrection of the Last Adam from the historically unique eschatological work of the Holy Spirit in those historic, cosmic events in Jesus’ life. Accordingly, Richard Gaffin warns of the tendency to misinterpret the primarily eschatological-Christological work of the Holy Spirit and to treat the work of the Spirit individualistically: “There has been an undeniable and persistent tendency to isolate the work of the Spirit and eschatological realities from each other. This has happened as part of a larger tendency to divorce the present life of the Church from its future. Typically the work of the Spirit has been viewed individualistically as a matter of what God is doing in ‘my’ life, in the inner life of the believer, without any particular reference or connection to God’s eschatological purposes,” Richard B. Gaffin, Jr., “‘Life-Giving Spirit’: Probing the Center of Paul’s Pneumatology,” JETS 41.4 (December 1998): p. 585.

1 of limitation, we must be careful that we do not operate with either unfounded 2 optimism or unfounded pessimism concerning the phenomena and their fruit.

3
4 Yet we are not left without a tool for measurement. God has given us the Old
5 and New Testaments, which provide the only reliable grid for assessing the Spirit's 6 work of applying redemption and building the church of Jesus Christ. Whatever the 7 nature of the phenomena themselves, the perspicuous teaching of Scripture 8 concerning the Spirit's ordinary work is summarized well in WCF 14.1 (cf. WCF 9 8.8): "The grace of faith, whereby the elect are enabled to believe to the saving of 10 their souls, is the work of the Spirit of Christ in their hearts, and is ordinarily 11 wrought by the ministry of the Word, by which also, and by the administration of the 12 sacraments, and prayer, it is increased and strengthened." This list expresses the 13 ordinary means of God's saving grace. In celebrating the phenomena there is a 14 danger of ignoring the ordinary means and the responsibility of the worldwide 15 church to trust the Spirit of God's primary use of them.

16
17 For instance, IJFM editor Brad Gill frankly admits a conscious editorial bias 18 within IJFM to attribute reports of events overseas to positive works of the Holy 19 Spirit, even if it earns IJFM "a reputation for reckless missiology".²¹³

20
21 The IJFM may seem to venture wildly on the edges of evangelical 22 mission thinking. I'm convinced this venturing is more likely grounded in 23 an intrepid belief in God's creative hand in the historical development of 24 unreached peoples. This belief, this expectancy, has oriented the IJFM to 25 editorially search, examine and interpret the historic shifts in religious 26 mood among major religious blocs of humanity always with an eye for 27 God's sovereign and surprising hand in it all. The editorial orientation 28 seems always ready, always wanting, to see through the mind of an 29 unreached people or a religious tradition and to discern what God may be 30 doing.²¹⁴

32 Thus, in IM analysis of the phenomena, the Word-bounded and Christ-33 centered ministry of the Holy Spirit in conversion can fade behind the compelling 34 accounts of experiences and phenomena, and the Spirit's ordinary and extraordinary 35 works effectively trade theological positions. As Len Bartlotti explains, "Advocates 36 defend insider movements as a unique work of the Holy Spirit in our day. The Spirit 37 is sovereignly using a variety of means to lead Muslims to Christ—from signs, 38 wonders, dreams, and visions, to reference to 'Isa al-Masih' (Jesus Christ) in the 1 Qur'an, sometimes complementing, other times in the absence of, outside Christian 2 witness and teaching."²¹⁵ The extraordinary is the expected and the ordinary 3 (unwittingly) moves effectively to the shadows.²¹⁶ At the very least, IM analysis of 4 the phenomena risks biblical imbalance.

5

6 So what of extraordinary dreams and visions? Their interpretation, and 7 interpretation of any phenomena at all, beg for biblical guidance. Whatever they may 8 be, visions and dreams ought not to be interpreted carelessly, naively, or stubbornly.
9 The phenomena must not be received as evidence that all associated with IM is 10 divinely blessed. Field data must rather be interpreted as the Spirit of God would 11 have his Church interpret phenomena—according to the Word of God. This appeal 12 moves bi-directionally, for those who tend toward skepticism about the phenomena 13 must also have their categories shaped by Scripture. J. I. Packer captures a biblical 14 balance well:
15

16 We are only open to the Spirit's ministry so far as we are willing, as it 17 were, to step into the Bible, to take our stand alongside the men to whom 18 God spoke—Abraham listening to God in Ur, Moses listening to God at 19 Sinai, the Israelites listening to God's word from the lips of Moses and 20 the prophets, the Jews listening to Jesus, the Romans and Corinthians and 21 Timothy listening to Paul, and so on—and, . . . to share joint tutorials 22 with them, noting what God said to them and then seeking to see, in the 23 light of that, what He would say to us. Such willingness is in most of us 24 very limited; we are prejudiced, lazy, and unprepared for the exercise of 25 spirit and conscience that it involves. But greater willingness and 26 increased receptiveness are themselves the Spirit's gifts. Therefore we 27 must use the prayer, 'teach me thy statutes' (Ps. 119:12, and seven times 28 more in this Psalm), as a plea, not only for teaching but also for 29 teachableness; for without the latter we shall never have the former.²¹⁷ 30

31 In interpreting field phenomena of any sort, the pressing truths of Scripture 32 about the Spirit's ministry must serve as the inexorable guide, and to that guide we 33 must remain thoroughly teachable, employing biblically shaped wisdom and 34 avoiding both hesitation and premature judgment. The point here is not that all 35 contemporary movements around the world lack real divine imprimatur or are devoid

1 of the work of the Holy Spirit. Rather, it is to insist that interpretation of the field
 2 data among people groups around the world must operate according to Scripture’s 3 self-interpreting boundaries concerning the work of the Spirit of the risen Christ and 4 to urge rigorous adherence to Scripture for any and all phenomenological analysis.
 5

6 The Holy Spirit operates freely and ordinarily by the means he as God has 7 graciously given to his people and defined by Scripture itself: the preaching of the 8 Word of God, the sacraments and prayer (WSC 88). The spread of the gospel comes 9 by the servants God has sent to the four corners of the earth to proclaim his Word 10 (WLC 159), and the Spirit ordinarily draws people to Christ through these divinely 11 appointed means. “The Spirit of God maketh the reading, but especially the preaching 12 of the Word, an effectual means of enlightening, convincing, and humbling sinners” 13 (WLC 155). While the Holy Spirit works at times in unusual ways to draw people to 14 Jesus Christ and while his ways remain duly mysterious, he never operates in ways 15 counter to his revealed Word. To align the Holy Spirit commonly or primarily with 16 something other than his revealed modus operandi—his ordinary application of 17 Christ’s redemptive work, conviction of sin, and illumining of blind hearts to Christ 18 Jesus as Savior and Lord—inevitably leads to faulty missiological analysis.
 19

20 In summary, the Spirit himself gladly binds himself to his Christ-centered 21 and scripturally defined parameters, whereby the redeeming God resurrects sinners 22 dead in their sins (Rom. 6:1ff; Eph. 2:1ff). In this very real sense, the ordinary work 23 of the Spirit is most extraordinary. The phenomena about which the Spirit is 24 primarily concerned are the phenomena accomplished in Christ’s comprehensive 25 redemptive work. In illumining the darkened hearts of unbelievers, the Spirit creates 26 the people of God from the nations of the world; his gloriously ordinary redemptive 27 application ministry bears extraordinary implications. Scripture repeatedly warns 28 against examining phenomena, even the extraordinary, and quickly assessing the 29 miraculous as evidence of divine activity (cf. 2 Thess. 2:9).²¹⁸ The Apostle John’s 30 exhortation to “test the spirits” means assessing them according to the Christ-31 centered Word of God (1 John 4:1-6). The Holy Spirit-given biblical revelation 32 exposes the true nature of the phenomena, and compels contemporary analysts to 33 assess these phenomena according to the poignant teaching of Scripture about the 34 Word of Christ and the Spirit of Christ.
 35

²¹⁸ The point, of course, is not that the reported phenomena are satanic; rather, that not all that claims to be or gives the appearance of divine activity is, in fact, divine activity.

1 As Scripture declares, the marvels of original creation are surpassed in glory
2 by the work of the Spirit of Christ in the resurrection-empowered accumulating 3 people from the tribes, tongues, and nations of the world before the throne of Jesus, 4 the Lamb of God. This Christ-exalting work of the Holy Spirit brings forth the 5 primacy of the Church, the Body of Jesus Christ its Head: “Whether we like it or not, 6 God has entrusted the means of grace to his church. Therefore, the church is 7 inextricably linked to the believer’s spiritual life from start to finish.”²¹⁹ To that 8 biblical doctrine of the church we now turn.
9

10 4. The Scripture’s Teaching on the Church

11 12 The doctrine of the church stands at the heart of Scripture’s teaching about 13 redemption. The Westminster Standards and the Book of Church Order provide a faithful 14 summary of the Scripture’s teaching on the church. They not only help us to appreciate the 15 place and role of the church in God’s saving purposes, but they also provide us categories 16 and distinctions to articulate what the Bible says about the church.
17

18 a. Church, Invisible and Visible

19 20 The Standards acknowledge the biblical distinction between the “invisible 21 church” and the “visible church” (WCF 25.1, 2; see Rom. 9:6; 2:25-29).²²⁰ In doing 22 so, the Standards do not understand the Scripture to speak of two separate churches.
23 We speak, rather, of an ‘invisible church’ and a ‘visible church’ in order to distinguish 24 the church as seen by God, and the church as seen by individual persons in the 25 finitude of time and space. “The universal visible Church is therefore not a different 26 Church from that which has just been described as invisible. It is the same body, as 27 its successive generations pass in their order and are imperfectly discriminated from 28 the rest of mankind by the eye of man.”²²¹ Although the memberships of the 29 invisible church and visible church overlap, there is no category for an individual 30 who professes membership in the invisible church but not in the visible church.²²²

²¹⁹ William M. Schweitzer, “The Insider Movement: The Answer is ‘No,’ In Reply to Timothy Tennant [sic]: ‘Can Someone Say ‘Yes’ to Jesus and ‘No’ to the Existing Local Expressions of the Church?’” The Aquila Report, January 20, 2013, <http://theaquilareport.com/the-insider-movement-the-answer-is-no-in-reply-to-timothy-tennant/> (accessed January 21, 2013).

²²⁰ The distinction between the visible and invisible church stands apart from the issue of ‘underground’ churches in persecuted areas, which are still part of the visible church as defined in WCF 25.2, WLC 62-3.

b. One Visible Church

The visible church is the one, redeemed people of God in every age of redemptive history.²²³ As God has a single redemptive purpose to save sinners through the work of his Son, Jesus Christ, so he has had throughout history a single redeemed people (Rom. 11:16b-24; Heb. 3:1-6).²²⁴ Thus, the Confession speaks of “the people of Israel” as “a church under age” (WCF 19.3), and declares that, whereas “the visible Church” had been “confined to one nation, as before under the law,” it is presently “catholic or universal under the Gospel” (WCF 25.2; cf. BCO 2-1).

Furthermore, as Stuart Robinson has noted, “it is set forth as a distinguishing feature of the purpose of redemption, that it is to save not merely myriads of men as individual men, but myriads of sinners, as composing a Mediatorial body, of which the Mediator shall be head.”²²⁵ This point is evident when we consider the various covenantal administrations of the one covenant of grace, through which God redeems sinners in every age (WCF 7.3).²²⁶ The Noahic Covenant serves to set apart and therefore to preserve the people of God from sinful intermarriage with “the daughters of men” (Gen. 6:4). The Abrahamic Covenant not only administers the promise of an Offspring who would bring blessing to the nations but is accompanied by a sign (circumcision) that both seals this promise to Abraham and to his offspring, and visibly distinguishes them—the people of God—from the world around them (Gen. 12, 17). The Mosaic Covenant in painstaking detail regulates and orders the life of this people as “a kingdom of priests and a holy nation” (Exod. 19:6). The Davidic Covenant looks to a king, David’s own offspring, who will reign forever over the people of God (2 Sam. 7:13), a point confirmed by the “New” Covenant that God announces through his prophets (Jer. 31:31 with Ezek. 34:24-25). The New Testament both continues and confirms this pattern. Under the New Covenant, saved persons were and are to be gathered into a society that is variously termed the people of God, the body of Christ, the household of God, the Temple of God, and the city or ²²³ See here the important treatment of Stuart Robinson, The Church of God as an Essential Element of the Gospel: The Idea, Structure, and Functions Thereof. A Discourse in Four Parts (1858; reprint, Willow Grove, PA: The Committee on Christian Education of the Orthodox Presbyterian Church, 2009). Note as well the more recent survey of Morton H. Smith, “The Church and Covenant Theology,” JETS 21.1 (March 1978): pp. 47-65. In this article, Smith helpfully contends that “the idea of the Church is found in ... the overall covenant structure [of Scripture] throughout the ages,” p. 47.

²²⁴ For exegetical discussion of these passages, see Guy Prentiss Waters, How Jesus Runs the Church (Phillipsburg, NJ: 2011), pp. 2-5.

²²⁶ The following is a summary of Waters, How Jesus Runs the Church, pp. 8-10.

1 commonwealth of God.²²⁷ At every point in redemptive history, then, God gathers 2 the individuals whom he redeems through his Son into a single and distinct people, 3 divinely created and divinely preserved—the church.
 4

5 The visible church will continue until the return of Christ at the end of the 6 age (Matt. 16:18; 28:20). Thus, to her “Christ hath given the ministry, oracles, and 7 ordinances of God, for the gathering and perfecting of the saints, in this life, to the 8 end of the world...” (WCF 25.3). At no point between now and our Lord’s return 9 will the church disappear entirely from the world. Rather, “there shall be always a 10 Church on earth to worship God according to his will” (WCF 25.5), and the visible 11 church “is one and the same in all ages” (BCO 1-2).
 12

13 c. The Growth and Extension of the Church 14

15 The Spirit of Christ alone conveys life and grants growth to the church (John 16 6:63). The Spirit is pleased, however, to work through ordinary means (WSC 85; 17 WLC 153-4). The New Testament is neither indifferent to nor silent about those 18 means through which the church grows, means that are tied to the mission of the 19 church. The church’s mission, assigned to her by Christ, is to gather and perfect the 20 saints (Matt. 28:18-20; Luke 24:44-49).²²⁸ Both the Gospels and the Acts highlight 21 the public preaching of the Word of God as the primary means by which the church 22 grows numerically.²²⁹ Preaching is also the means by which the church grows in 23 maturity, as Paul discusses at some length in Eph. 4:11-16 and, more extensively, in 24 the Pastoral Epistles.
 25

26 Since the idea of preaching has been subject to many definitions, and since 27 individual conceptions of preaching can carry non-biblical or even un-biblical 28 connotations, it is important to sketch a biblical definition of preaching. In content, 29 preaching consists of what Paul calls “the whole counsel of God” (Acts 20:27). The 30 center or core of the message preached is the atoning death and life-giving 31 resurrection of Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 15:1-3; Gal. 3:1; 1 Cor. 2:2). Biblical preaching

²²⁷ For elaboration on these and other New Testament images of the church, see E. P. Clowney, “The Biblical Theology of the Church,” in The Church in the Bible and the World: An International Study, ed. D. A. Carson (Exeter: Paternoster; Grand Rapids: Baker, 1987), pp. 13-87.

²²⁸ The terminology is from BCO 1-2.

²²⁹ To be sure, God may and has drawn sinners to Christ through means other than the public proclamation of the Word. The Scripture, however, directs us to the preaching of the Word as the God-appointed means through which people come to faith in Christ. Our rule or standard in this matter is not what may have happened or may be happening in the providence of God, but what God has legislated for his people in the Scripture.

1 is not the mere declaration of information, but summons its hearers to respond in 2 faith and repentance (Acts 2:38; 16:31; Mark 1:15). The proper hearing of the 3 preached word, therefore, is an active and not a passive enterprise. This preaching is 4 authoritative (Matt. 7:28-29) and, therefore, bold (Acts 9:27-28; 13:46; 14:3; 18:26; 5 19:8; Eph. 6:19-20). The authority of preaching is vested not in the person of the 6 preacher, but in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Those who preach are called to 7 preach – by the Spirit and through the church (Acts 13:1-3; 1 Tim. 4:13-14; 2 Tim.
 8 1:6). Preachers are therefore styled ambassadors, heralds, and stewards of the 9 mysteries of God (2 Cor. 5:20; 2 Pet. 2:5; 1 Cor. 4:1).

10 The sacraments of baptism and the Lord’s Supper are also “means of grace.” 11 Through them, the promises of the Word of God are signified and sealed to worthy 12 recipients who, through the exercise of faith in those promises, are spiritually 13 strengthened and nurtured. Thus, while “the grace of faith ... is ordinarily wrought 14 by the ministry of the Word,” it is by that same ministry “and by the administration 15 of the sacraments, and prayer,” that faith “is increased and strengthened” (WCF 16 14.1).²³⁰

 18 The New Testament pattern, reflected throughout Acts and the Epistles, is 19 that individuals who respond to the preached Word in faith and repentance gather 20 into distinct, local communities of professing believers and their children. Their life 21 together is ordered by the Word of God, through officers whom they have chosen to 22 serve them. As the BCO summarizes the point, “a particular church consists of a 23 number of professing Christians, with their children, associated together for divine 24 worship and godly living, agreeable to the Scriptures, and submitting to the lawful 25 government of Christ’s kingdom” (4-1). Owing to some difficult and extraordinary 26 circumstances, Christians may find that their “lot is cast in destitute regions” (4-4).
 27 They ought “to meet regularly for the worship of God” (4-4) and to take all necessary 28 measures to order their life in keeping with the requirements of biblical polity.

29 30 d. Notae Ecclesiae

31
 32 In company with other Protestant confessions, the Standards predicate certain 33 marks of the church (notae ecclesiae).²³¹ These marks assist us in identifying a true

²³⁰ The sacraments must always be administered with sensitivity and care. Those entrusted with their administration should labor to ensure that recipients of baptism and the Lord’s Supper are receiving the sacraments for the right reasons and the right motives.

²³¹ See here the important discussion of James Bannerman, The Church of Christ: A Treatise on the Nature, Powers, Ordinances, Discipline, and Government of the Christian Church, 2 vols. (Edinburgh: T & T Clark, 1868), 1:54-67. Note especially Bannerman’s dissent from Rome’s insistence upon unity, holiness, catholicity, and apostolicity as defining marks of the church.

1 church, and in distinguishing churches from other societies, even societies of genuine 2 believers.²³² The Confession defines the “visible Church” as “consist[ing] of all those 3 throughout the world that profess the true religion; and of their children” (WCF 25.2).
4 The single mark identified by the Confession, then, is “possessing the truth.”²³³
5

6 To identify the visible church in this fashion need not exclude other, defining 7 marks. The Belgic Confession, for instance, identifies three marks of the visible 8 church.
9

10 If the pure doctrine of the Gospel is preached [in the Church]; if it 11 maintains the pure administration of the sacraments as instituted by 12 Christ; if Church discipline is exercised in punishing sin; in short, if all 13 things are managed according to the pure Word of God; all things 14 contrary thereto rejected, and Jesus Christ acknowledged as the only 15 Head of the Church. Hereby the true Church may certainly be known, 16 from which no man has a right to separate himself (Article 29).²³⁴ 17

18 Upon closer reflection, one may readily harmonize these confessional 19 statements.²³⁵ Both Westminster and the Belgic Confession identify the church in 20 terms of the “true religion” (WCF 25.2) or “the pure word of God” (Article 29), and 21 particularly as that word is purely preached. Implicit in such a mark is the right 22 administration of the sacraments and of church discipline.²³⁶ Westminster’s 23 definitional minimalism owes, Bannerman notes, to the fact that “outward 24 ordinances are not fundamental or essential to a Church ... they are made for the 25 Church, and not of those for which the Church was made ... the Church was 26 instituted for the truth, and not the truth for the Church.”²³⁷ Consequently, the “pure 27 preaching and profession of the word” belongs to the esse of the church, “since ²³² In this respect, then, certain matters such as fellowship, mutual love and concern, and bearing gospel witness to outsiders, while characteristic of any true church, are not defining of it. This is so because these activities and traits are not unique to Christian churches but may be and often are true of other Christian societies.

²³³ Bannerman, The Church of Christ, 1:62.

²³⁵ Note the diversity of opinion among Reformed theologians regarding the number of the marks of the church, ibid., p. 576.

²³⁶ So Bannerman, The Church of Christ, 1:62; Turretin, Institutes of Elenctic Theology, 3 vols. ed. James T. Dennison, Jr., trans. George Musgrave Giger (Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 1992-7), 3:87. Turretin notes particularly how the sacraments and church discipline “flow from the word of God and are appendages of it,” p. 87; and that “other [marks] are not excluded but included,” p. 88. He can say, therefore, commenting on Acts 2:42, “wherever the doctrine of the apostles and the legitimate use of the sacraments and of prayers are, there the true Church of Christ certainly is,” p. 89.

²³⁷ Bannerman, The Church of Christ, 1:62.

1 without it the church cannot exist.”²³⁸ The identical kind of necessity, however, may 2 not be predicated on either the administration of the sacraments or the exercise of 3 church discipline.²³⁹ To draw this distinction, however, in no way suggests that the 4 right administration of the sacraments and the biblical exercise of church discipline 5 are thereby optional, dispensable, or matters of indifference to the church. On the 6 contrary, when they are rightly related to the pure preaching of the Word, they may, 7 in this sense, be properly termed “marks” of the church. For this reason, the BCO 8 positively identifies as “true branches of the Church of Jesus Christ” as “all of these 9 which maintain the Word and Sacraments in their fundamental integrity” (2-2).

10 e. The Kingdom of God and the Church

 12
 13 The WCF identifies the “visible church” with “the kingdom of the Lord Jesus 14 Christ” (25.2). How may we understand this identity? It is important to recall that the 15 Scripture speaks of God’s reign or dominion in distinct senses. There is what has 16 been termed the “essential kingdom of God.”²⁴⁰ This phrase denotes the universal 17 reign of God as creator over the works of his hands (Psa. 103:19). This reign 18 concerns human beings as they are creatures, and neither increases nor diminishes.
 19 There is also the “mediatorial kingdom of God.” This phrase denotes the reign of the 20 risen and ascended Christ over all things for the sake of his church (Eph. 1:22). This 21 reign particularly concerns human beings as they are sinners, redeemed by the blood 22 of Christ, and indwelt by the Spirit of Christ. This reign is increasing until the day 23 when “the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his 24 Christ” (Rev. 11:15).

 26 The Synoptic Gospels contain ample testimony to the centrality of the 27 preaching of the (mediatorial) Kingdom of God to the earthly ministry of Jesus 28 (Mark 1:15; Matt. 4:17,23).²⁴¹ The Kingdom of God, Jesus testifies, breaks into 29 history in his person and work (Matt. 11:2-15; cf. Luke 17:21). The Kingdom of God 30 was consummated neither in Jesus’ own day nor in our own (Matt. 13:36-43). Until 31 the Kingdom’s King, Jesus, returns in glory, the Kingdom continues to expand as the ²³⁸ Turretin, Institutes, 3:87.

²⁴⁰ For this distinction, see representatively James Fisher, the Westminster Assembly’s Shorter Catechism Explained by Way of Question and Answer, 3d ed. (reprint, Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Christian Education, 1925), p. 138.

²⁴¹ Note the extraordinarily helpful and brief treatment of Ridderbos, “The Kingdom of God in the Synoptic Gospels,” in When the Time Had Fully Come: Studies in New Testament Theology, pp. 9-25.

1 word of God is preached, and men and women respond to the Sower’s Word in the 2 way of faith and repentance (Matt. 13:1-9; 18-23).
 3

4 At first glance, it is surprising to see the paucity of references to ‘Kingdom’ 5 outside the Synoptic Gospels, especially in Acts and the Epistles. Some critics have 6 even accused the apostles, and especially the apostle Paul, of departing from Jesus’ 7 kingdom message. However, as Herman Ridderbos has famously observed, “Paul 8 does nothing but explain the eschatological reality which in Christ’s teachings is 9 called the Kingdom.”²⁴² This point is underscored by the way in which references to 10 “kingdom,” especially in Acts, are of a programmatic character, virtually defining of 11 Paul’s message and ministry (Acts 14:22; 20:25; 28:23,31). While the term “kingdom” 12 may recede verbally in Acts and the Epistles, that which ‘kingdom’ denotes in the 13 Synoptic Gospels (the redemptive order inaugurated by the death and resurrection of 14 Jesus Christ) remains conceptually dominant throughout the rest of the New 15 Testament. Its dominance is evident not in spite of but precisely because of Paul’s 16 ongoing exposition of the redemptive significance of Christ’s death and resurrection.
 17

18 When this conceptual continuity between Jesus’ teaching and that of the 19 apostles is taken into account, the relation between “kingdom” and “church” comes 20 into proper focus.²⁴³ Although Jesus only mentions the church (Gk. ekklēsia) by 21 name on two occasions in the Gospels (Matt. 16:18, 18:17), those two passages 22 clarify that, by the proclamation of the apostolic word about Jesus, the resurrected 23 Jesus will gather persons into a single people, a distinct society (Matt. 16:18).²⁴⁴ This 24 people is continuous with “old Israel ... the people of the covenant and of the 25 promises.”²⁴⁵ And yet, the dawning of the Kingdom of God radically transforms this 26 people.
 27

28 The new thing is that this ekklēsia now comes into the light of the 29 Kingdom of God. All earlier qualifications of the ekklēsia as the people 30 of the election, of the covenant and of the promises, are sublimated in the 31 Kingdom of God, are “fulfilled” as it says in the New Testament. When 32 the Kingdom comes, the proper and spiritual sense of the Church comes ²⁴² Herman Ridderbos, When the Time Had Fully Come: Studies in New Testament Theology (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1957), p. 49. Ridderbos elaborates, “Paul as the witness last called stands behind the facts, notably behind the facts of Christ’s death and resurrection. It is these facts that he is to preach and interpret as the culminating point of the Kingdom of God which has appeared in Christ, as the deciding acts in the divine, eschatological drama,” p. 49.

²⁴³ On this question, see especially Geerhardus Vos, The Teaching of Jesus Concerning the Kingdom of God and the Church (1903; reprint, Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 1979); and Herman Ridderbos, The Coming of the Kingdom (Phillipsburg, NJ: P&R, 1962), pp. 334-396.

1 into the light. But in the extensive sense, too, the ekklēsia acquires in the 2 Kingdom new proportions and new relations. The ekklēsia is integrated in 3 the worldwide power of the Kingdom: henceforth it is foregathered from 4 all nations. This is the one great line connecting basileia (kingdom) and 5 ekklēsia.²⁴⁶

6
 7 Jesus explicitly associates the church (ekklēsia) with the kingdom (basileia)
 8 at Matt. 16:19. Jesus' explanation of the Parable of the Weeds at Matt. 13:36-41 9 conceives the kingdom, in the period between his resurrection and his return, as "an 10 aggregate of men," or "a body of men placed under the Messiah as their ruler."²⁴⁷ 11 Consequently, without saying that the visible church exhausts all that may be said of 12 the kingdom—a proposition studiously avoided by WCF 25.2—we may nevertheless 13 conclude that the New Testament consistently directs us to the visible church—and 14 to no other—as the place where, in this era of redemptive history, we may behold the 15 Kingdom of God. As Vos observes, "the church is a form which the kingdom 16 assumes in result of the new stage upon which the Messiahship of Jesus enters with 17 his death and resurrection."²⁴⁸ Ridderbos can even speak of the church, so far as 18 human beings are concerned, as "the soteriological goal" of the kingdom.²⁴⁹ The 19 visible church and the kingdom are distinguishable, to be sure, but they are 20 inseparable. One may not claim membership in the kingdom without also claiming 21 membership in the visible church.

22 23 f. Insider Movements, the Kingdom, and the Church

24 The topics of the Kingdom of God and of the church do surface in IM 25 discussions. Three IM proponents in particular, Rick Brown, Rebecca Lewis, and 26 Kevin Higgins, have given particular attention to Kingdom and church in their 27 writings.²⁵⁰ Before addressing what Brown, Lewis, and Higgins have said in these 28 areas, however, a few preliminary, staging observations are in order.

29 30 First, as Sleeman has noted, it is striking to observe the frequency with which 31 IM proponents appeal to Jesus' parable of the leaven as a "positive metaphor for ²⁴⁶ Ibid., pp. 21-22.

²⁴⁷ So rightly Vos, Teaching, p. 82.

²⁴⁸ Vos, Teaching, p. 86. Compare Ridderbos' similar but fuller statement in The Coming of the Kingdom, pp. 354-5.

²⁴⁹ Ridderbos, The Coming of the Kingdom, p. 355.

²⁵⁰ Doug Coleman has recognized the importance of the latter two individuals with respect to this question, A Theological Analysis of the Insider Movement Paradigm from Four Perspectives: Theology of Religions, Revelation, Soteriology and Ecclesiology (Pasadena, CA: William Carey International University Press, 2011), pp. 224-245. The discussion that follows was drafted independently of Coleman's treatment of Lewis and Higgins.

1 insider movements.”²⁵¹ This parable (Matt. 13:33) is undoubtedly a positive 2 reference to the Kingdom of God.²⁵² It denotes the progress of the Kingdom by a 3 “gradual” and unseen “power that permeates everything.”²⁵³ The question must be 4 raised, however, whether IM proponents have aptly employed this metaphor so as to 5 do justice to the way in which the New Testament writers understand the visible 6 church to be the Kingdom of God.²⁵⁴

7 8 Second, IM proponents are reticent in using classical theological terminology 9 and categories to reflect upon the church. Explicit discussions, for example, of such 10 ecclesiological matters as an ordained ministry, the administration of the sacraments, 11 and the exercise of church discipline are rare. IM proponents have insisted that C5 12 believers do and ought to gather publicly for “prayer, worship, and reading of the 13 Christian Scriptures.”²⁵⁵ It is not true to say, therefore, that there is no corporate 14 dimension to the church in IM writings. It is fair to observe, however, that a robust 15 exposition of many dimensions of the government, discipline, and worship of the 16 church is a striking lacuna in IM writings.

17
 18 Some may say that that new believers must work out the structure of 19 government, discipline and worship in their own culturally appropriate way, drawing 20 from the Scripture, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. To propose any robust 21 exposition on these topics on our part, the argument continues, would result in the 22 imposition of our culturally determined beliefs and practices on these believers. Such 23 a rationale, however, presupposes that these topics are culturally determined rather 24 than biblically legislated. Because the Scripture is concerned to set forth normative 25 principles regulating the church’s government, discipline and worship, it is not a 26 cultural imposition to encourage believers in Muslim countries to order their lives 27 according to these principles.

²⁵¹ Matthew Sleeman, “The Origins, Development and Future of the C5/Insider Movement Debate,” SFM 8.4, August 2012, p. 536, citing representatively Stuart Caldwell, “Jesus in Samaria: A Paradigm for Church Planting Among Missions,” IJFM 17.1 (Spring 2000): p. 30; Charles Kraft, “Is Christianity a Religion or a Faith?,” in Appropriate Christianity, op. cit., p. 92; Rebecca Lewis, “Insider Movements: Honoring God-Given Identity and Community,” IJMF 26.1 (Spring 2009): p. 19. To this list we may add John Travis and J. Dudley Woodberry, “When God’s Kingdom Grows Like Yeast: Frequently Asked Questions about Jesus Movements within Muslim Communities,” Mission Frontiers, July-August 2010, pp. 24-30; and Kevin Higgins, “Beyond Christianity: Insider Movements and the Place of the Bible and the Body of Christ in New Movements to Jesus,” Mission Frontiers, July-August 2010, p. 13.

²⁵⁴ So Sleeman, op. cit., p. 536.

²⁵⁵ William, “Inside/Outside,” p. 70.

1 Third, and at a more basic level, IM writings use the term “church” with 2 some infrequency, and prefer to employ such terms as “community” or 3 “movement.”²⁵⁶ The “C” in Travis’ C1-C6 spectrum, for example, stands for “Christ-4 centered community.” While C-1 and C-2 refer to groups that Travis terms 5 “churches,” C-3, C-4, C-5, and C-6 groups are not denoted “church” but simply 6 “Christ-centered community.”²⁵⁷ Some prefer to speak of “Jesus movements within 7 Muslim Communities.”²⁵⁸ Rebecca Lewis does speak of C5 communities as 8 “churches.”²⁵⁹ In one recent definition of Insider Movements, however, Lewis sets 9 the word “church” in quotation marks, likely to avoid giving the impression that this 10 community is a “new parallel social structure” and that its members have severed ties 11 with “their socio-religious community.”²⁶⁰ Finally, while J. S. William does refer to 12 C5 communities as “church,” and to the public worship of these communities as 13 “doing church,” his concluding and summarizing “set of commitments” refrains from 14 using the term.²⁶¹ William furthermore clarifies what IM proponents mean when 15 “they advocate the formation of ‘churches’—it consists of ‘encourag[ing] believers 16 to utilize existing social networks.”²⁶²

17
 18 To be sure, the word “church” has in the minds of some non-Christians, 19 especially in the Muslim world, non-biblical and anti-biblical connotations. Some IM 20 proponents may be motivated by a desire to preclude or forestall the association of 21 these connotations with believing communities. While this desire is a laudable one, it 22 is important to recognize that the Scripture does use the word “church” of the body 23 of believers. Even as we are sensitive to the connotations of biblical terminology 24 among contemporary audiences, we must embrace and wisely employ the terms and 25 descriptions that God has supplied for his people in the Scripture.

26
 27 These preliminary observations underscore the need to understand IM
 28 reflections on the Kingdom and the church on their own terms. Care must be taken, 29 then, to avoid importing theological assumptions into IM uses of terminology and ²⁵⁶ Two notable exceptions to this trend are Kevin Higgins, “Inside What? 4 (1) Rick Brown

5 Rick Brown, translation consultant for Wycliffe/SIL, has devoted 6 considerable attention to the nature of and relationship between the Kingdom of 7 God and the church.²⁶³ Brown understands the Kingdom to admit of “stages” or 8 “phases of development.”²⁶⁴ He is clear that these stages belong to a single 9 kingdom, not separate kingdoms altogether.²⁶⁵ The Kingdom of God, then, runs 10 from its inauguration at the beginning of Jesus’ public ministry to its 11 consummation at the return of Jesus at the end of the age.²⁶⁶

13 Brown understands the church to be in very close relationship with the 14 Kingdom of God. He argues that the New Testament term ekklēsia denotes “local 15 bodies of citizens of the Kingdom of God” as well as “the body of Kingdom 16 citizens as a whole.”²⁶⁷ The church, then, is hardly ancillary to the Kingdom of 17 God. In fact, Brown argues, “the Kingdom community is both the result of God’s 18 mission and a means for its blessings and expansion to all peoples of the earth.”²⁶⁸

19
20 Brown furthermore acknowledges the distinction between the church visible 21 and invisible. He not only references in support such texts as Matt. 13:24-30, 36-22 43; 25:32; and 1 John 2:19, but favorably cites Calvin and Augustine as faithful 23 exponents of this biblical distinction.²⁶⁹ For Brown, this distinction entails two 24 points. First, not every member of the visible church is a true member of the 25 invisible church. Second, the invisible church consists of Christ’s “true sheep, 26 whether in a visible fold or not,” that is to say, some of these true sheep may be 27 “unchurched.”²⁷⁰

28
29 Given these definitions, how does Brown understand the Kingdom of God 30 and the church to relate to one another? To understand Brown’s conception of 31 this relationship, it is necessary to introduce a third category or set of categories

²⁶³ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 1,” and idem., “The Kingdom of God, Part 2.”

²⁶⁴ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 1,” p. 8; “The Kingdom of God, Part 2,” p. 49.

²⁶⁵ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 2,” p. 50.

²⁶⁶ Ibid. Note especially Brown’s Figure 6.

²⁶⁷ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 1,” p. 10.

²⁶⁸ Ibid.

²⁶⁹ Ibid., pp. 10-11.

²⁷⁰ Ibid., p.11. Note how Brown speaks of “folds” expressly in terms of social groupings; see ibid., p. 10, esp. Figure 1.

1 that Brown employs, that of “religion.” For Brown, “religion” includes not only 2 non-Christian religions but also specific Christian denominations and Christian 3 religious traditions.²⁷¹ What is “religion,” particularly within a Christian context?
 4 It is what defines or distinguishes a “Christian denomination” and sets that 5 denomination “in competition with other Christian denominations and non-6 Christian religions.”²⁷² Examples of such defining or distinguishing features 7 include “particular theological formulations, form of church polity, professional 8 clergy, religious calendar, rituals, order of worship, denominational associations, 9 style of religious buildings.”²⁷³ These features, Brown urges, may be “useful” for 10 Kingdom purposes, but are neither “ends in themselves” nor “mandate[d] ... for 11 Kingdom communities (ecclesiae).”²⁷⁴ After all, “Jesus did not found an 12 institutional religion or commission his disciples to propagate one.”²⁷⁵ What 13 counts are not “religious rites and rituals” but “the Kingdom of God, living ‘in 14 Christ,’ praising God, praying in one’s heart, and meeting together frequently as 15 loving faith communities.”²⁷⁶

 17 An added liability to “religion,” especially within Christian contexts, is that it 18 promotes social conflict and struggle with other religions in order to “persuade 19 ... people of other religions ... to convert to one’s own.”²⁷⁷ The true struggle, 20 according to the New Testament, is the spiritual struggle of the Kingdom of God 21 against the kingdom of Satan. These two struggles differ inasmuch as kingdom 22 struggle does not seek “to promote one religious tradition over all others,” but “to 23 advance the Kingdom of God in all social groups.”²⁷⁸ In order to achieve this end 24 the apostle Paul “was polite towards Gentiles rather than polemical, drawing 25 them towards the Savior.”²⁷⁹ Jesus did not “condemn [Gentiles] religious 26 traditions and institutions but revealed to them something far better: the Kingdom 27 of God and the surpassing grace of the King.”²⁸⁰

²⁷¹ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 2,” p. 54. Examples of groups corresponding to “forms of Christian religion” that Brown offers include Roman Catholics, Orthodox Christians, Pentecostals, Anglicans, Lutherans, and Baptists, “Kingdom of God, Part 1,” p. 11.

1 In summary, Brown argues that what is necessary for “spiritual growth is that 2 people (1) belong to the invisible ecclesia of God’s Kingdom and (2) be a part of 3 a local ecclesia of fellow members of the Kingdom.”²⁸¹ It is not necessary that 4 they leave “denominations” or “socioreligious groups” in order to affiliate with 5 others.²⁸² “Kingdom assemblies” need not “identify with a form of Christian 6 religion,” and Christians must allow “God time to develop these faith 7 communities in the way he wants ... bringing them into maturity as Kingdom 8 communities.”²⁸³ One benefit of this approach, Brown argues, is that “the Gospel 9 of the Kingdom” will “spread throughout [the] social networks” of which these 10 Kingdom disciples are already part.²⁸⁴

11 12 Turning then to consider Brown's formulations: Brown correctly insists upon 13 a single Kingdom of God within the teaching of the New Testament. Brown 14 furthermore helpfully distinguishes the Kingdom of God from the church in such 15 a way that yokes the two together in service of a common divine mission. Brown 16 also grasps the importance of the distinction between the invisible and visible 17 church, even if his particular formulation leaves unclear whether one may claim 18 membership in the invisible church without affiliating with the visible church.²⁸⁵

19
 20 Brown’s employment of the category “religion” particularly presents 21 significant problems for his reflections on the Kingdom and the church. A couple 22 of observations are in order. First, the term “religion” encompasses and unites 23 two diverse entities—Christian denominations and non-Christian religions. To 24 define “religion” in this fashion suggests a degree of parity or equivalency 25 between Christian denominations and non-Christian religions. Brown does not 26 understand the two to be equal in every respect. They are aligned in so far as they 27 stand antithetically related to the “Kingdom of God.”

28
 29 But is this alignment at all defensible? Brown categorically asserts but 30 nowhere argues that such distinguishing features of Christian denominations as 31 church government and “particular theological formulations” belong to 32 “religion” and therefore stand against the Kingdom of God. But Presbyterians 33 have long advanced biblical arguments for jure divino church government as 34 essential to the well-being of the visible church. While Brown’s phrase

²⁸¹ Ibid., p. 56.

²⁸³ Ibid., p. 57.

²⁸⁴ Ibid., p. 58.

²⁸⁵ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 1,” p. 11. See our discussion above in connection with this reference.

1 “particular theological formulations” is an imprecise one, it is worth noting that 2 the apostle Paul understood his calling to “declare the whole counsel of God” 3 even as he went about “proclaiming the kingdom” (Acts 20:27,25). It is one thing 4 to express disagreement with a particular denomination’s understanding of 5 theology, polity, or worship. It is another matter entirely for Brown to suggest 6 that substantial ecclesiological reflection upon theology, polity, or worship is 7 antithetical to the Kingdom of God and therefore subversive of disciples’ maturing 8 in the faith. On the contrary, the Scripture’s teaching on these subjects is an 9 indispensable part of the biblical doctrine by which Christian disciples mature.

10 11 Second, the New Testament does not support Brown’s contention that the 12 Kingdom’s advancement does not entail confrontation of false religion. Jesus 13 was explicit in telling the Samaritan woman “you worship what you do not 14 know; we worship what we know, for salvation is from the Jews” (John 4:22). In 15 other words, Samaritan worship was false, and biblical (Old Testament) worship 16 was true. To claim that Jesus did not “condemn [Gentiles’] religious traditions 17 and institutions” is therefore not true to the biblical record.²⁸⁶

18 19 The apostles, furthermore, evidence confrontation with other religions as they 20 were engaged in the work of proclaiming the gospel of the Kingdom of God.
 21 Paul could tell the Lystrans that their religious ordinances were “vain things” in 22 contrast with a “living God who made the heaven and the earth and the sea and 23 all that is in them” (Acts 14:15). Paul challenged the Athenians’ conception of 24 “the divine being [as] gold or silver or stone, an image formed by the art and 25 imagination of man,” and urged them to “repent” (Acts 17:29-30).²⁸⁷ Paul’s 26 ministry in Ephesus was widely and accurately perceived as a threat to the cult of 27 Artemis (Acts 19:21f.).²⁸⁸ Paul’s first epistle to the Thessalonians, widely 28 regarded to have been drafted shortly after his evangelistic campaign in 29 Thessalonica, speaks of the Thessalonians as having “turned to God from idols to 30 serve the living and true God” (1 Thess. 1:9), a statement that surely presumes an ²⁸⁶ Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 2,” p. 55. One must also take into account the fact that Jesus was sent only to the lost sheep of Israel (Matt. 10:5). It was not the primary purpose of his ministry directly to engage Gentile individuals, much less non-Jewish religions. In light of the nature of Jesus’ mission, then, that Jesus did so engage one such individual on this particular question is telling.

²⁸⁷ Pace Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 1,” p. 55.

²⁸⁸ Brown understands the town clerk’s words in verse 37 (“For you have brought these men here who are neither sacrilegious nor blasphemers of our goddess”) as evidence of Paul’s non-confrontational stance towards Artemis worship, but this is hardly the sole exegetical possibility, see J. A. Alexander, The Acts of the Apostles, 2 vols. (New York: Scribner, 1857), 2:217. Nor is it even likeliest exegetical possibility, C. K. Barrett, Acts 15-28, International Critical Commentary, vol. 2 (New York: T & T Clark, 1998), pp. 936-7, citing Chrysostom Homily 42.2.

1 earlier message of confrontation against pagan idolatry. In short, categorically to 2 deny confrontation as a biblical means of advancing the Kingdom of God runs 3 counter to the New Testament data. This is not to say that this kind of 4 confrontation is required every time the word is preached. It is to say that Jesus 5 and his apostles did not shrink from declaring false religions to be false, in the 6 service of proclaiming the gospel of the Kingdom.

7 8 (2) Rebecca Lewis

9 Rebecca Lewis has defined “insider movements” as “movements to obedient 10 faith in Christ that remain integrated with or inside their natural community.”²⁸⁹ 11 By “movement” she understands “any situation where the Kingdom of God is 12 growing rapidly without dependence on direct outside involvement.”²⁹⁰ This 13 concept of “movement” owes much to McGavran’s description of “people 14 movements” who come to Christ in the aggregate rather than individually, often 15 without missionary witness. Thus, such “house churches” formed are “pre-16 existing social networks turning to Christ rather than artificial aggregate 17 groupings,” and “retain” their “social identity.”²⁹¹ These churches “are not 18 institutionalized, and the people in both movements share a new spiritual identity 19 as members of the Kingdom of God and disciples of Jesus Christ,” although “this 20 new spiritual identity is not confused or eclipsed by a new social identity.”²⁹²

21
 22 Lewis argues that the “aggregate-church model”—the “gathering together 23 [of] individual believers ... into new ‘communities’ of faith”—“works well in 24 highly individualistic Western cultures (e.g., the US).”²⁹³ This model, however, 25 is ineffective and even counterproductive in “most of the world,” where people 26 “live in cultures that have strong family and community structures.”²⁹⁴ The 27 model of the New Testament, rather, is the “oikos or household-based church, 28 where families and their pre-existing relational networks become the church as 29 the gospel spreads in their midst,” and “decisions to follow Christ are often more 30 communal rather than individual.”²⁹⁵ Thus, “the movement to Christ has ...
 31 remained inside the fabric of the society and community.”²⁹⁶ The goal is to 32 “remain in and transform” those “networks” with “minimal disrupt[ion]” to those

1 networks. Therefore, “these believing families and their relational networks are 2 valid local expressions of the Body of Christ, fulfilling all the ‘one another’ care 3 seen in the book of Acts...”²⁹⁷ This is the way in which, Lewis urges, that “the 4 gospel [will] take its course among the Muslims and Hindus...like yeast in the 5 dough.”²⁹⁸ Our task in missiology, she argues, is to “see what God seems to be 6 doing and evaluat[e] that in the light of scripture (copying the apostolic process 7 in Acts 15).”²⁹⁹ Lewis believes that she is describing the way in which the gospel
 8 spread in the New Testament.³⁰⁰ As the gospel infiltrated and permeated oikos- 9 networks in Acts—Lewis cites the examples of Cornelius, Lydia, and Crispus—10 so also the gospel spreads today.³⁰¹ “Jesus movements within any culture or 11 religious structure, no matter how fallen, will be able to transform it.”³⁰² 12

13 What are we to make of Lewis’ paradigm, particular as it bears on the 14 Scripture’s teaching on the church? Lewis is certainly correct to say that the New 15 Testament provides normative guidance with respect to principles concerning the 16 extension of the church. She is also correct to identify Cornelius, Lydia, and 17 Crispus as examples of heads of household, through whom the gospel entered a 18 pre-existing social network. One must question her insistence, however, that 19 these examples in Acts are meant to supply the kind of biblical norm for which 20 Lewis pleads. Acts affords as many, if not more, examples of individuals coming 21 to faith in Christ through the public preaching of the word by the apostles (Acts 22 2:41; 4:4; 8:13; 8:26; 13:12; 17:14; 17:34). In these instances of conversion, 23 there is no indication of the presence, much less the mediating presence, of the 24 pre-existing social network that Lewis describes. Even more to the point, Acts 25 not infrequently depicts the positively disrupting effects of the gospel within 26 certain pre-existing social networks (e.g., Acts 13:42-52; 17:1-9; 17:10-14; 18:1-27 2; 19:9).³⁰³ Although Lewis is quick to dismiss what she terms the “aggregate-28 church model” as ineffective in non-Western settings, and insinuates that it is the 29 by-product of Western culture, she does not give adequate consideration to the 30 biblical precedents for just such an approach.

1 Furthermore, Acts insists that those who profess faith are to be gathered into 2 like-minded communities broader than the familial household. Therefore, while 3 the New Testament writers can address certain Christians as belonging to a 4 particular household (1 Cor. 1:16; Philemon 2; Acts 11:14; Acts 16:15; Acts 5 18:8; Col. 4:15), they can nevertheless identify an entire congregation or even the 6 entire visible church in explicit ‘household’ (oikos) terms (Gal. 6:10; Eph. 2:19; 7 1 Tim. 3:15; Heb. 10:21; 1 Pet. 4:17).³⁰⁴ Such language hearkens back to Old 8 Testament references to God's entire covenant people as "the house of Israel" 9 (Exod. 16:31 is the first of many examples). Tellingly, while the New Testament 10 arguably may speak of oikos at times in terms of what Lewis calls a pre-existing 11 social network, the New Testament is clear that such households do not exhaust 12 the term as that term is applied to the church.

13
 14 Strikingly, Paul’s use of the term oikos in 1 Tim. 3:15 surfaces in a 15 discussion of the qualifications of the elder (cf. 3:5). This suggests that, for Paul, 16 the oikos here is a unit ordered by a government distinct from that of the 17 household or pre-existing social unit, and imposed by the apostles upon the 18 whole church. The formation of a distinct and apostolic government for this 19 oikos, or local congregation, suggests that Lewis’s dichotomy between “artificial 20 aggregate groupings” and “pre-existing social networks turning to Christ” is not 21 true to the New Testament data.³⁰⁵ Why would Timothy be instructed to appoint 22 leaders for a community that already existed?

23
 24 Furthermore, as Span has noted, Paul use of oikos at Eph. 2:19 (with v. 20) 25 defies an understanding of the term strictly in terms of pre-existing social 26 networks.³⁰⁶ Gentile believers are “no longer strangers and aliens” but “fellow 27 citizens with the saints and members of the household of God, built on the 28 foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus himself being the 29 cornerstone.” To speak of church as a “household” is to speak of the church as 30 founded upon the “apostles and prophets.” Again, Lewis’s restrictive definition 31 impoverishes and distorts the fullness of this New Testament term.

32
 33 A more basic methodological objection may be raised against Lewis’s 34 paradigm. Lewis has chosen one biblical metaphor for the church (‘household’), 35 but has failed to consider and to give comparable weight to other New Testament

³⁰⁴ These passages are drawn from John Span, “Towards a Biblical Theology of ‘Oikos,’” SFM 6.1, February 2010, p. 245.

³⁰⁵ So, rightly, Span, “Oikos,” p. 246.

1 metaphors for the church, including “flock,” “temple,” “bride,” “assembly,” 2 “chosen people, royal priesthood, holy nation, a people belonging to God,” 3 “vine,” “saints,” and “field.”³⁰⁷ In other words, a fuller biblical theology of the 4 church, such as that intimated at WCF 25.2, is necessary to avoid not only a 5 partial but also a skewed portrayal of the New Testament’s teaching about the 6 nature and the extension of the church. From the standpoint of New Testament 7 theology, to privilege the single metaphor of oikos to the exclusion of other 8 metaphors, appears arbitrary.

9 10 (3) Kevin Higgins

11
 12 Another IM proponent who has provided extended reflection upon the church 13 is Kevin Higgins. While approvingly citing Rebecca Lewis’s definition of IM 14 noted above, Higgins offers his own definition.

15
 16 A growing number of families, individuals, clans, and/or friendship-17 webs becoming faithful disciples of Jesus within the culture of their 18 people group, including their religious culture. This faithful 19 discipleship will express itself in culturally appropriate communities 20 of believers who will also continue to live within as much of their 21 culture, including the religious life of the culture, as is biblically 22 faithful. The Holy Spirit, through the Word and through His people 23 will also begin to transform His people and their culture, religious 24 life, and worldview.³⁰⁸

25
 26 How do these communities relate to the church? Higgins, following Lewis, 27 argues simply that “pre-existing social structures can become the church.”³⁰⁹ 28 Higgins proceeds to reflect on the church, especially in light of criticisms that 29 have been raised by IM proponents. He argues, first, that “the Church is made up 30 of believers who have been saved by grace through faith. In one sense it is true to 31 say that no one can join the Church. People are spiritually born into it by 32 God.”³¹⁰ Second, the Church’s “primary strategy ... to fulfill its purpose” is “to 33 multiply itself through functions such as those listed in Acts 14:21-28,” including 34 “selecting and training and appointing elders in every church, and connecting 35 with and participating with other churches in the ongoing expression of the ³⁰⁷ This list has been drawn from the fuller list at ibid., p. 249.

³¹⁰ Higgins, “Inside What?,” p. 77.

1 Gospel,” although Higgins stresses that “those same biblical functions can take 2 place as an insider movement albeit with altered forms and vocabulary.”³¹¹ 3

4 Higgins is also concerned to relate the church to the Kingdom of God. He 5 argues that “the Kingdom of God includes the Church, but is bigger than the 6 Church. The Kingdom refers to the whole range of God’s exercise of His reign 7 and rule in the universe. This includes religions. The Kingdom paradigm 8 acknowledges there is another kingdom as well, and takes seriously the battle for 9 the allegiance and hearts and minds of people.”³¹² Higgins understands “God at 10 work in the religious life of mankind” to extend more broadly than the church.
11 But what, for Higgins, does this precisely mean?
12

13 It means that “God is drawing people to Himself beyond the confines and 14 boundaries we normally refer to as ‘His people’.”³¹³ These individuals may even 15 be said to be “in relationship” with God, although Higgins stresses that to say this 16 “does not necessarily imply that such a relationship is a saving relationship.”³¹⁴ 17 Higgins sees his model as identifiable with neither exclusivism, inclusivism, nor 18 pluralism.³¹⁵ Rather, we must “acknowledge some combination of all three 19 elements,” and recognize that “no template can be applied to every situation in 20 the same way.”³¹⁶
21

22 Higgins’s statements about the church proper have commendable elements.
23 He is correct to say that the church has a biblically mandated mission, and to 24 acknowledge that certain details of her government are prescribed in Scripture 25 itself. What is troubling is what goes unstated. Higgins’s definition of the church 26 as “only those born from above and incorporated by the Spirit in his Body” not 27 only neglects the covenantal nature both of the church and of membership in the 28 church,³¹⁷ but fails to address both the sacramental dimensions of church 29 membership (baptism) and the governmental dimensions of church membership 30 (e.g., examination by the church’s elders; reception by profession of faith). It 31 addresses, in other words, inward and invisible dimensions of church

1 membership, but it neglects to address certain outward dimensions of church 2 membership—dimensions that the New Testament does not regard as 3 unimportant or dispensable to a well-ordered church. It is not that Higgins sees 4 no place for government within the church. We have noted above that he does. It 5 is that he is not concerned to relate the functioning of the church’s government to 6 his understanding of church membership.

7 8 Higgins’ statements about the Kingdom are troubling as well. Higgins 9 understands the Kingdom to be broader or more extensive than the church. The 10 area of non-overlap is a specifically religious area. This formulation is 11 problematic for at least two reasons. First, Higgins’s definition of the Kingdom 12 raises questions about his understanding of the relation of the church to the 13 Kingdom of God. The precise New Testament relationship between the Kingdom 14 and the church that our Confession articulates (WCF 25:2) and which we have 15 sketched above cannot be sustained by Higgins’ definition. While, for Higgins, 16 the church may be a manifestation of the Kingdom, nothing in his definition 17 requires that the church be the single place to which the New Testament directs 18 us to behold the Kingdom of God. Indeed, his definition appears to be crafted 19 specifically to avoid such an implication.

20
 21 Second and more importantly, Higgins’s understanding of the Kingdom 22 cannot sustain the exclusivity of the Christian religion. To his credit, Higgins’ 23 concluding remarks stress his desire to “reaffirm ... the conclusion that Jesus is 24 the only way of salvation,” and that “the Gospel is unique.”³¹⁸ But how may one 25 reconcile that affirmation with his subsequent statement that “If God is active in 26 other religions, then to at least some degree His truth can be found and responded 27 to within the context of those other religions”?³¹⁹ Higgins’s formulations 28 concerning Kingdom and church, then, raise profound soteriological questions 29 and have serious missiological implications.

30 g. Some General Reflections on IM, the Kingdom, and the Church

31
 32
 33 Stepping back from Brown’s, Lewis’, and Higgins’ proposals specifically, it is 34 appropriate to offer some reflections and raise six reservations about IM proponents’ 35 statements about the church and the Kingdom more generally.

318 Higgins, “Inside What?” p. 88.

319 Ibid.

1 First, IM proponents offer statements about the Kingdom of God that may be 2 read as antithetically relating the Kingdom and the church. J. S. William favorably 3 cites John and Anna Travis: “Jesus’ primary concern was the establishment of the 4 Kingdom of God, not the founding a new religion.”³²⁰ Rebecca Lewis argues that 5 “the new spiritual identity of believing families in insider movements is in being 6 followers of Jesus Christ and members of His global kingdom, not necessarily in 7 being affiliated with or accepted by the institutional forms of Christianity that are 8 associated with traditionally Christian cultures. They retain their temporal identity in 9 their natural socio-religious community, while living transformed lives due to their 10 faith in Christ.”³²¹ If the Travises and Lewis intend to exclude the church—its 11 government, discipline, and worship—from what they term “a new religion” or 12 “institutional forms of Christianity,” it is not evident from these statements.

13
 14 Some statements by IM proponents about the Kingdom define the Kingdom 15 in decidedly, even exclusively, inward and invisible terms. John Ridgway, 16 summarizing Jesus’ teaching about the Kingdom, declares that “the whole kingdom 17 lifestyle seemed independent of any religious structure.”³²² Furthermore, “at the 18 heart of the gospel from Genesis to Revelation is God’s desire to reconcile every 19 ethnic community...” This would happen, Ridgway continues, “not ... through 20 organized religion but through Jesus’ introduction of the Kingdom of God.” Such 21 statements rob the Kingdom not only of its biblical ties to the church but conceivably 22 to any normative form whatsoever. It effectively, as John Span, summarizing one 23 criticism of Ridgway, has observed, “pit[s] the spiritual against [the] physical,” and 24 thus constitutes a “problematic...dualism.”³²³

25
 26 Second, a related dichotomy surfaces in some proponents’ discussions about 27 the church. In response to the question whether “Jesus-following Muslims [who] do 28 not join traditional Christian churches or denominations ... see themselves as part of 29 the body of Christ,” Travis and Woodberry reply that “the great majority of Jesus-30 following Muslims view all people who are truly submitted to God through Christ, 31 whether Christian, Muslim, or Jewish, as fellow members of the Kingdom of God.
 32 The presence of the Spirit of God in both born-again Christians and born-again 33 Muslims points to realities—the body of Christ and the Kingdom of God—that go

1 beyond socio-religious labels and categories.”³²⁴ The unity for which Travis and 2 Woodberry plead, in other words, is invisible and Spiritual but does not necessarily 3 have ecclesiastical dimensions.
 4

5 Similarly, in response to a question about the administration of the 6 sacraments among “Jesus movements within Muslim communities,” Travis and 7 Woodberry respond with respect to water baptism that, while “most Jesus-following 8 Muslims” observe water baptism, some “do not yet practice outward water baptism” 9 but “consider themselves to have been baptized spiritually because of their 10 relationship with Christ, who baptizes with the Holy Spirit.”³²⁵ Likewise, with 11 respect to the Lord’s Supper, “it is a common practice, during a meal shared 12 together, to remember the sacrifice of Jesus for the forgiveness of sins...”³²⁶ Both 13 examples are deficient in the same respect—they are alleged instances of the 14 observance of Christian sacraments, but without the specific intention of observing 15 the sacrament, without the elements of water, bread, and wine, without the lawful 16 administration by a Christian minister, outside the context of the public worship of 17 God (cf. WCF 27.4, WLC 176).³²⁷
 18

19 Third, this discomfort with church, form, and order evident within IM 20 literature is attended by IM proponents’ privileging of Jesus’ parable of the leaven, 21 noted above. The Kingdom is said to spread secretly and inwardly, through pre-22 existing social networks, until the totality of the network or culture has been 23 influenced and captured by the gospel. This understanding of the extension of the 24 kingdom is without reference to the public preaching of the Word of God. At times 25 public preaching does occur, but IM paradigms do not give it the primacy warranted 26 by Scripture. This is a startling omission given the way in which Jesus identified 27 preaching as the primary means by which the Kingdom would expand (Mark 4:1-28 20), a fact confirmed by Jesus’ own ministry (Matt. 4:23), his choosing of twelve 29 disciples to proclaim the Kingdom in his own day to Israel (Matthew 10), and, after 30 his resurrection, to the world (Matt. 28:18-20; Luke 24:44-49; John 20:19-23). In 31 voicing this concern, we do not deny that the gospel may and does spread through 32 pre-existing social networks. Neither do we deny that IM proponents advocate and 33 promote the dissemination of the Word of God in Muslim contexts. Neither do we ³²⁴ Travis and Woodberry, “When God’s Kingdom Grows Like Yeast,” p. 28.

³²⁵ The authors provide a footnote, “This is the position held by Quakers and the Salvation Army.” This footnote suggests the importance to the authors of citing some sort of precedent for this position. Compare the sympathetic and similar reflections of Brown, “The Kingdom of God, Part 2,” p. 57, p. 59 fn. 26.

³²⁶ Travis and Woodberry, “When God’s Kingdom Grows Like Yeast,” p. 29.

³²⁷ While not all traditions share this confessional language, what we have in mind is the faithful biblical administration of the sacraments.

1 insist upon a particular style of preaching that owes more to Western convention than 2 to biblical norms. We are saying, rather, that IM proponents have given insufficient 3 attention and place to the New Testament's understanding of the public preaching of 4 the Word.

5
6 The ministry of the apostles in the Acts, a ministry that is both centered upon 7 the public and authoritative proclamation of Christ, and that is properly denominated 8 a “kingdom” ministry, as we have argued, corroborates the data from the Gospels.
9 The commands set forth by Paul in the Pastoral Epistles extend the same pattern into 10 the period of time between the passing of the apostolic generation and the return of 11 Christ. God has appointed an ordained ministry to proclaim the Word of God, by 12 which sinners will be converted and saints will be edified. IM proponents’ reading 13 and appropriations of the parable of the leaven reflect a general failure to grasp the 14 broader pattern of Scripture’s teaching about the relationship between Kingdom and 15 Church, and about the extension of the Kingdom through the authoritative 16 proclamation of the Word.

17 18 Fourth, IM understandings of the church risk stunting the growth and 19 maturity of real believers present in these “Jesus-based communities.” The regular 20 ministry of the Word of God and the administration of the sacraments are “means of 21 grace.” Christ has appointed these means in his church precisely in order to grow and 22 to mature his people by the power of the Holy Spirit. The discipline of the church, 23 furthermore, is intended for the spiritual welfare of the disciplined individual (1 Cor.
24 5:5). Any understanding of the church that justifies these means’ absence or that 25 militates against their regular and ongoing administration in any appropriate setting 26 can, therefore, only be to the detriment of true Christians in such situations.

27
28 Fifth, IM understandings of the church place outsiders in a particular 29 quandary with respect to identifying the “Jesus-based communities” in question. On 30 what basis might we recognize these bodies as churches? We have observed above 31 how Reformed confessions and writers alike have pointed to the Word of God, 32 particularly the preached Word of God as the defining mark of the church. It is not 33 simply that these bodies lack officers whose calling it is to open the Word of God to 34 them. It is that the IM understandings of Kingdom and church surveyed above 35 evidence neither the urgency of nor even the necessity of introducing such officers 36 into the church. IM methodology, in other words, does a disservice to these bodies 37 by perpetuating a situation that is not conducive to outside churches’ desires to 38 recognize, assist, and encourage bodies that may in fact prove to be sister churches.

1 Sixth, IM understandings of the church fail to evidence serious interaction 2 with historical Christian reflection on the doctrine of the church and, back of that, the 3 biblical testimony to the church. Most IM proponents are self-identified Protestants 4 and are, therefore, heirs of a Reformational tradition that has devoted considerable 5 attention to the Scripture’s teaching on the church. But it is precisely such a tradition 6 that IM proponents have failed to engage. This is not a complaint that IM proponents 7 have failed to embrace and to propagate the fine points of Presbyterian polity. It is to 8 say, rather, that discussions of such basic or fundamental matters as the marks of the 9 church; the invisible and visible church; and the means of grace require considerably 10 more attention than IM proponents have generally afforded in their writings. This is 11 not to say, furthermore, that IM proponents are operating with no understanding of 12 the church. They have, we have seen, definite understandings of the Kingdom, of the 13 church in relation to the Kingdom, and of the progress and growth of the Kingdom.
 14 These understandings, however, require to a considerable degree more exegetical 15 and theological articulation and exposition than they have thus far been afforded.

16 17 2. Covenant Identity

18 19 a. Employing a Biblical Paradigm

20
21 Though the doctrine of the church is unsuitably muted within IM, discussions 22 of identity feature prominently in IM writings. One’s identity is a matter, in fact, 23 which IM advocates and critics alike deem as a core feature of the debate.³²⁸ Tim 24 Green admits of the complexities involved:

25
26 Making sense of “identity” can be difficult. This is partly because different 27 academic disciplines define identity in different ways. Psychologists 28 focus on the private self-awareness of individuals, while anthropologists 29 and some sociologists view identity as a collective label marking out 30 different groups. Social psychologists describe “identity negotiation” 31 between individuals and groups. So there is no universally agreed 32 definition, and that is before taking theological perspectives into 33 account!”³²⁹

³²⁸ See, for example, the entire issue of IJFM 27.1 (January-March 2010); Tim Green, “Identity Issues for Ex-Muslim Christians , with Particular Reference to Marriage,” SFM 8.4, August 2012, pp. 435-481; Henry J. Wolfe, “Insider Movements: An Assessment of the Viability of Retaining Socio-Religious Insider Identity in High-Religious Contexts” (PhD diss., Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 2011); Dutch, “Should Muslims Become ‘Christians’?”

³²⁹ Green, “Identity Issues,” p. 438.

1 As seen earlier, Rebecca Lewis' definition of Insider Movements specifies 2 that Insiders “remain inside their socioreligious communities, retaining their identity 3 as members of that community while living under the Lordship of Jesus Christ and 4 the authority of the Bible.”³³⁰ In order to analyze this definition for internal 5 coherence, one must consider how identity relates to the Lordship of Christ and the 6 authority of the Bible. First then, one needs a theology of "identity." This proves no 7 mean task, since the term "identity" appears not in the Bible, but in psychology and 8 sociology texts which may not operate under biblically based presuppositions about 9 the nature of man and his relation to self, the rest of creation, and Creator.

10 11 Even in the secular arena, no standard definition of “identity” reigns. In the 12 words of Stanford University political scientist James Fearon, “Our present idea of 13 'identity' is a fairly recent social construct, and a rather complicated one at that. Even 14 though everyone knows how to use the word properly in everyday discourse, it 15 proves quite difficult to give a short and adequate summary statement that captures 16 the range of its present meanings.”³³¹ Fearon traced current usage of the term 17 "identity" to mid-Twentieth twentieth century psychologist Erik Erikson³³² and gave 18 a variety of sample definitions from the literature, e.g., “people's concepts of who 19 they are, of what sort of people they are, and how they relate to others.”³³³ Such a 20 definition, which leaves each person's identity strictly in his own hands to define, 21 cannot be accepted uncritically by Christians. An alternative such as, “a nexus of 22 relations and transactions actively engaging a subject”³³⁴ at least admits the 23 possibility for God to be one of the "relations engaging a subject," and even the 24 central such relation. But even then, one wonders what unbidden, unbiblical 25 presumptions lie buried in the technical jargon. “[P]roblems accruing to the use of 26 secular learning in Kingdom service are not easily resolved.”³³⁵ From reading 27 missiological works, including those in IM, however, it does appear that vast array of 28 cultural anthropological assumptions for identity dominates the landscape.

29 30 In addition to the varied ideas associated with the term “identity,” an almost 31 entirely neglected clarification is the distinction between identity and sense of ³³⁰ Lewis, “Promoting Movements,” p. 75.

1 identity. So frequently presupposed are the cultural anthropological and sociological 2 categories, the critical distinction between a person or group’s perception and that 3 which is true remains entirely neglected. Just like an adopted child may never 4 personally know his/her genetic history, the lack of knowledge does not change the 5 fact of that genetic history. Similarly, cultural and personal perceptions suffer human 6 limitations, but divinely disclosed revelation (in Scripture) which explains 7 individuals and societies, remains true—whether or not people believe it. Yet, the 8 divine revelation concerning human identity can even unwittingly get relegated to 9 tertiary status because of the sociological assumptions given a particular term like 10 identity in contemporary thought. Furthermore, submission to biblical revelation 11 actually requires that perception of one’s identity yield wholly to the biblical 12 concepts that govern it. Scripturally speaking, it is man’s creation as the image of 13 God (imago Dei) and man’s covenantal relationship with God that properly shape 14 identity.

 16 The early Church considered Gen. 1:26, “Let us make man in our image, 17 after our likeness” and concluded that “the human self was a mystery that could not 18 be unlocked.”³³⁶ Even Augustine who famously made an analogy between the 19 Trinity and the human mind’s remembering, understanding, and willing (De 20 Trinitate) confessed, “I find my own self hard to grasp.”³³⁷ John Calvin centered his 21 understanding of true humanity in the human par excellence. In other words, proper 22 understanding of the imago Dei comes only through what Scripture reveals about it 23 and its renewal through Jesus Christ.³³⁸

24
 25 Furthermore, while Western philosophy moved in the direction of defining 26 what individual personhood meant, no such equivalent can be found in the biblical 27 record.³³⁹ In many ways reacting against the intolerable individualism of twentieth 28 century rationalism, postmodern theology locates the self in “one’s social group.”³⁴⁰ 29 Yet even with the evangelical formally laudable move toward community, such 30 paradigms such as those espoused by Grenz in which “the imago dei moves the focus

1 from noun to verb,”³⁴¹ the notion of identity often suffers from cultural 2 presuppositions rather than biblical ones. In the biblical world, however, identity 3 came not through individual belief or action, nor did it come through one’s social 4 context. Self-understanding came through what Michael Horton terms, “a biblical-5 theological effort to resuscitate selfhood (damaged by the fall) in the lived 6 experience of the covenant and eschatology.”³⁴² In other words, it was our locating 7 ourselves within the covenantal story that furnished us with religious and personal 8 (though the two were not differentiated) self and corporate identity. In short, a proper 9 grasp of identity in all of its contours must come from divine revelation, the 10 covenantal revelation of God in Scripture.

11 At the core of the Bible’s thinking about human identity is God’s creative act 12 in making men and women like unto himself. “Fundamental to Genesis and the 13 entirety of Scripture is the creation of humanity in the image of God.”³⁴³ He formed 14 us out of created matter, just as he did the rest of the universe (Gen. 2:7). He then 15 placed us in the Garden, emblematic of God’s temple or heavenly abode. In other 16 words, he made us so that we would reside with God as children and stewards of 17 creation (2:15), not as his equals but as loved recipients of his favor, enjoying all he 18 had for them (2:9). As Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, existing in perpetual self-giving 19 love, God made man (Heb. “Adam”) in God’s image as a relational being, first in 20 terms of his relationship to God. God created one human first, so that the initial 21 relationship for human beings was one between God and human and then 22 subsequently, God created “a helper fit for him” (2:18). The significance of this 23 order cannot be overestimated. The first human relationship was with God, not other 24 human beings. Therefore, our relationship to God primarily defines us, not our 25 relationships to other humans. This, of course, is not to say that human relationship is 26 insignificant but that it is derivative of the divine/human relationship.

27
 28 In addition to the biblical and theological significance of the imago Dei, 29 Scripture uniformly defines the worldwide human context as covenantal. In fact, the 30 covenant serves as the core biblical paradigm for understanding mankind’s 31 relationship with God. So central is this covenantal context that Scripture itself not 32 only reveals the prominence of the covenant, but does so as a covenant document: 33 “The documents which combine to form the Bible are in their very nature . . .
 34 covenantal. In short, the Bible is the old and new covenants.”³⁴⁴ The Creator has not 1 only established the human context as covenantal, he has communicated with those 2 in his image covenantally.

3
 4 Recognizing this categorical and interpretive feature of Scripture, WCF 7.1 5 lays the covenantal foundation explicitly: “The distance between God and the 6 creature is so great, that although reasonable creatures [those made in God’s image] 7 do owe obedience unto Him as their Creator, yet they could never have any fruition 8 of Him as their blessedness and reward, but by some voluntary condescension on 9 God’s part, which He hath been pleased to express by way of covenant.” The vast 10 gap between Creator and creature finds remedy in the covenantal condescension of 11 God to relate to those made in his image. In view of the relational, religious, and 12 social implications wrapped up in the biblical notion of covenant, it is here that we 13 must begin to think about humans in relationship.

14
 15 Because of the inescapable religious contours of the covenant and that 16 Scripture exposes mankind as living coram Deo (before the face of God), covenantal 17 accountability of man before God shapes the way in which to understand properly all 18 peoples and all cultures of all ages. It is to this covenantal accountability we now 19 turn, with an eye to discerning a covenant identity paradigm (CIP) that must serve to 20 shape all other analyses of human and social identity—both actual and perceived. In 21 the early argumentation of the great Epistle to the Romans, the Apostle Paul exposes 22 the comprehensive implications of the covenant.

23 24 b. True and False Religion

25
 26 Romans 1:18-3:20 grounds Paul’s argument for the necessity of Christ’s 27 redemptive work for all peoples—Jews and Gentiles. His focus is the pervasive 28 character of disobedience and corruption. Sin is neither a Jewish problem nor a 29 Gentile problem; it is an Adamic problem and therefore a human problem (Rom.
 30 5:12). “Paul shows that the whole world is deserving of eternal death. It hence 31 follows, that life is to be recovered in some other way, since we are all lost in 32 ourselves.”³⁴⁵

33
 34 As descendants of Adam and active participants in his and our own 35 disobedience, we have all fallen short of the glory of God (Rom. 3:23). We are 36 guilty, corrupt, and alienated from God. As sinners, we also willfully, actively, and ³⁴⁵ John Calvin, Commentaries on the Epistle of Paul, the Apostle, to the Romans, (Edinburgh: Calvin Translation Society, 1849), 68.

1 persistently seek to suppress the voice of God, whom we personally and passionately 2 resist. “We all, born as we are into our sinful state and continuing in that state by 3 virtue of our wickedness, nevertheless know God,”³⁴⁶ albeit with knowledge willfully 4 distorted by our hearts and minds. It is this knowledge, covenantally qualified by 5 God’s condescending kindness to fellowship with those made in his image in vital 6 covenantal communion (WCF 7), which defines human relationship to the creator 7 God.

8
 9 Though fallen humanity has autonomously erected religious systems, “no 10 religion is genuine unless it be joined with truth.”³⁴⁷ Echoing Paul, Calvin, in 11 describing the universal “semen religionis (seed of religion)” or “sensus divinitatis 12 (sense of divinity),” uniformly condemns false religion as idolatrous: “Since, 13 therefore, men one and all perceive that there is a God and the he is their Maker, they 14 are condemned by their own testimony because they have failed to honor him and to 15 consecrate their lives to his will.”³⁴⁸ Substitute deities and substitute religious 16 practices supplant the truth, and indeed the idolaters who practice these false 17 religions do so to their own condemnation. “He who is not for me is against me,” 18 claims Jesus (Matt. 12:30).

19 20 The fall of human beings with Adam, the first covenant head, resulted in a 21 sin-perversion that created worshipful counterfeits. Nowhere does that fallenness 22 manifest itself more profoundly than in the substitutes we create for God and our 23 devotion to him. In the first place, mankind substituted faith in one holy God, ever 24 transcendent but ever immanent in the revealed Son and Holy Spirit, for following 25 after of the gods of the nations. Tantamount in this grasping for false gods was the 26 supreme enterprise of unbelief, the Tower of Babel (Genesis 11). Adam and Eve had 27 been ejected from the Garden temple of the Lord God through our usurpation of the 28 divine prerogative. In Genesis 11, the peoples repeated the same sin in collaborating 29 with other fallen humans to achieve proximity with God. But, the result was the 30 same. Entry into the presence of God was barred to those who presumed to do what 31 only God was entitled to do. “He drove out the man, and at the east of the garden of 32 Eden he placed the cherubim and a flaming sword that turned every way to guard the 33 way to the tree of life” (Gen. 3:24). In other words, human attempts at relationship 34 with God would forever be met with failure. Every attempt at human religion would 1 ultimately and forever only resemble its craftsmen, human beings. The end of this

3
4 Galatians 4 describes any other religion than that of the pure gospel of Jesus 5 Christ as “elemental principles” (NEV) or “elemental things” (NASB)—ta stoicheia 6 (cf. Heb. 5:12; Col. 2:8, 20),³⁴⁹ demonically prompted vain religious or philosophical 7 means for seeking self-redemption,³⁵⁰ the folly of which revealed their utterly 8 helpless condition. In whatever way we precisely define ta stoicheia,³⁵¹ Paul places 9 Gentile religions and the corrupted version of Jewish religion—typified by a 10 rejection of Judaism’s Messiah, Jesus of Nazareth, under one rubric: “in slavery to 11 powers utterly beyond their control.”³⁵²

12
13 With a sweeping assessment of history and penetrating look at the spiritual 14 antithesis that characterizes sinful man and the righteous Creator, the apostle Paul 15 insists all forms of impure religion to be false, and in overt defiance of the Son of ³⁴⁹ This paragraph’s treatment of ta stoicheia summarizes David B. Garner, “Adoption in Christ” (PhD diss., Westminster Theological Seminary, 2002), pp. 97-99.

³⁵⁰ The meaning of ta stoicheia must be contextually determined, as its semantic range is vast. Depending on its context, it can reference either divine revelation (Holy Spirit) or false teaching (including the subterranean influence of evil spirits). The specific meaning of ta stoicheia has received extensive treatment, and involves considerable debate. See, e.g., Josef Blinzler, “Lexikalisches zu dem Terminus ‘Ta Stoicheia Tou Kosmou’ bei Paulus,” in Studiorum Paulinorum Congressus Internationalis Catholicus 1961, 2 vols., Analecta Biblica 17-18 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1963), pp. 429-43; Clinton E. ³⁵¹ James Scott points out that the ‘stoicheia’ are here identified with both the Torah and with non-deities of the pagan Gentiles. “In effect, therefore, Paul classes Judaism with polytheism as enslavement under the stoicheia!” James M. Scott, Adoption as Sons of God: An Exegetical Investigation into the Background of YIOUTHESIA in the Pauline Corpus (Tubingen: J.C.B. Mohr [Paul Siebeck], 1992), p. 158. George Howard agrees with this conclusion, contending “that Paul looked upon that version of Christianity propagated by the judaizers as synonymous with paganism since it made Yahweh into the national God of Israel only,” Paul: Crisis in Galatia: A Study in Early Christian Theology, SNTSMS 35, 2nd ed., ed. G. N. Stanton (Cambridge: Cambridge University, 1990), p. 66. Further, just as Paul groups Jews and Gentiles under ‘ta stoicheia’ (4:3), so also he views both groups as ‘hypo nomon’ (4:5). The unity of Jew and Gentile in the reception of ‘huiothesia’ indicates contextually that both peoples were under the curse of the law. Furthermore, “Paul teaches elsewhere that the law condemns both Jews and Gentiles (cf. Rom. 3:9-20) and thus confines them (Gal. 3:23),” Scott, YIOUTHESIA, p. 173.

³⁵² Donald Guthrie, Galatians, NCB (Greenwood, SC: Attic Press, 1969), p. 118.

1 God.³⁵³ Prominent in Paul’s developing thought in Romans, as in Galatians 3-4, is 2 the redemptive-historical (epochal) transition wrought by the arrival and work of 3 Jesus Christ (Gal. 4:1-6; cf. Rom. 3:21-26). The former epoch is characterized by 4 curse and bondage, but the cosmically significant work of Christ inaugurates the new 5 age of the Spirit (cf. Rom. 8:15-17).³⁵⁴

6 The New Testament contends both for the authoritative revelation of God in 7 the Old Covenant (2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:19-21) and the completing, teleological 8 superiority (“the better word,” Heb. 12:24) of the New Covenant revelation in Christ 9 (cf. Heb. 1:1-2:9; 3:1-6; 12). In contrast to the notion of abrogation in Islam, in the 10 Christian Scriptures, there is a redemptive-historical abrogation with theological 11 fulfillment. On the stage of redemptive history, God delivers promise then 12 fulfillment; while the type/shadow comes to an end in history, the theological 13 significance of the type comes to eschatological fulfillment and never a contradictory 14 reversal. Thus, the New Testament authors also proclaim the fulfillment of the Old 15 Testament in the New, warning against any evil distortion of Old Covenant 16 revelation which would deny its Christocentricity (John 5:39-47) and its 17 eschatological realization in Jesus Christ (Gal. 1-3; 1 Cor. 1:-2; 2 Cor. 1:19-22).
 18

19 Judaism that denies New Testament fulfillment is a rejection of Jesus Christ 20 and of the entire Old Testament revelation.³⁵⁵ The Christian faith is the Abrahamic 21 faith realized (Gal. 3:8-29; cf. Luke 24:13-52). Judaism without the gospel of grace 22 in Jesus Christ in any age (Rom. 1:1-2; Gal. 3:8; cf. John 5:39-47) is false Judaism.
 23 This fact, however, underscores the uniqueness of the Jewish faith. The religious and 24 worship regulations of Israel under the Old Covenant come from divine revelation, 25 not ethno-centric evolution and adaptation. This is not to say that the Israelites did 26 not adapt, and even at points corrupt, the revealed religion (Jesus and Paul are 27 explicit about that problem). Rather it is to say that the religion, as revealed, was a 28 divine gift and mandate that served as the theological and anticipatory context for the 29 coming of the gospel in Jesus Christ (cf. Gal. 3:7-29). The faith and practice of the ³⁵³ Church history attests to regular response to aberrant teaching and heresy. Maintaining the pure gospel requires tireless attention of the church and its leaders (cf. Acts 20; 2 Pet. 2; Galatians 1-2), and depends on functional dependence upon biblical revelation. The confessional history of the church delivers a powerful attestation to the clarity of Scripture and the relevance of it in addressing untruth.

³⁵⁴ “When Paul says that Christ appeared in the fullness of the time he implies that the great midpoint of history has arrived, that Old Testament prophecy has now come to fulfillment.” Anthony Hoekema, The Bible and the Future (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1979), 17.

³⁵⁵ This non-Christian Judaism overlooks the heart and object of the covenant. The result is either a substitution of Moses for Christ, or, with Rabbinic/Reformed Judaism, the ascent of both rationalism and mysticism. To be covenantal is to have the covenantal source, covenantal route, covenantal destination, and covenantal empowerment. Biblical revelation proceeds to the fulfillment of the Old Covenantal promises in the New Covenant Christ.

1 Jews, insofar as they reflected biblical revelation, were the theological and historical 2 grounds for New Testament faith in Jesus Christ. The Jewish faith then is not 3 culturally parallel to its Gentile counterparts, but wholly unique historically and 4 theologically.³⁵⁶

5
 6 Living now in the age of the Spirit, revelation has come to its completion in 7 work of Jesus Christ, the “guarantor of a better covenant” (Heb. 7:22). What the Old 8 Covenant believer anticipated and possessed in his proleptic participation in the work 9 of the Lord Jesus by the Holy Spirit, the New Covenant believer participates in by 10 the Spirit’s application of the exalted Jesus’ work retrospectively.³⁵⁷ Biblical 11 revelation presents Jesus Christ as the Savior of his people of all ages (Heb. 9:26-28; 12 10:14; 11:39-40).

 14 Since Gen. 3:15, the world has received redemptive truth, and it is revealed 15 truth—gospel truth that centers on Jesus Christ (cf. Luke 24:13-52; 1 Pet. 1:10-12).
 16 Anything other than this revealed truth for redemption is false, deceptive, and 17 damning. Scripture consistently bears out the uniqueness, exclusivity, and 18 redemptive efficacy of God’s redemptive work on our behalf. Antithesis between 19 belief in the pure, revealed gospel of grace and belief in any form of false religion—20 including unfulfilled, Christ-less Judaism³⁵⁸—stands out starkly.

21
 22 In fact, it is the false monotheistic religions whose formulations ostensibly 23 parallel biblical revelation that typify the most prominent delusion. All forms of 24 monotheism that are not Christian monotheism (Trinitarianism) are false theisms.
 25 Formal similarity masks paradigmatic incompatibility, and false religion is 26 persuasive precisely because of its illusive compatibility with true revelation. Despite 27 any seeming sympathy toward biblical revelation, the advocates of imposter faiths 28 move defiantly against the God whose voice they suppress and whose will they 29 resist. Such defiance is at its core rebellion against the Son of God, the essence of 30 which condemns the unbeliever.

³⁵⁶ See David B. Garner, “High Stakes: Insider Movement Hermeneutics and the Gospel,” Themelios 37.2 (July 2012): pp. 257-67.

³⁵⁷ “Taken as a whole the New Testament seems to indicate one fundamental difference between old and new covenant believers. That is the Spirit-worked union New Testament believers have with the exalted Christ, the life-giving Spirit, the Christ who is what he is, because he has suffered and entered into his glory. The covenantal communion with God enjoyed by Abraham and the other old covenant faithful was an anticipatory and provisional fellowship; it lacked the finality and eschatological permanence of our union with (the glorified) Christ, which is the ground and medium of our experiencing all the other blessings of redemption.” Richard B. Gaffin, “The Holy Spirit,” WTJ 43:1 (Fall 1980): pp. 71-72.

1
 2 The religion of Islam therefore is false because it did not come from God’s 3 special revelation. It denies Jesus Christ as he is revealed in biblical revelation.
 4 Islam, in a certain sense, benefits from God’s general revelation as well as from what 5 it inherited (or absorbed) from Jewish and Christian traditions to which Muhammad 6 was exposed. However, the theological corruption which suppressed the divine 7 revelation belies the historical connections. The cumulative effect of Islam is to 8 move people away from a genuine relationship with God, because its monotheistic 9 formulations are not those of biblical Trinitarianism, but those of a false religion 10 whose monotheism eclipses and suppresses the truth rather than comports to it.
 11 “Mohammed’s mission, whatever else it may have been or done, was a blindfolding 12 of Jesus, an eclipse of the Sun of Righteousness by the moon of Mecca.”³⁵⁹ The 13 Islamic edifice is a prominent manifestation of truth suppression, something which 14 the Apostle Paul broadly considers in Romans 1.
 15

16 c. God, Covenantal Suppression and Idolatry

17 For the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and 18 unrighteousness of men, who by their unrighteousness suppress the truth.
 19 For what can be known about God is plain to them, because God has 20 shown it to them. For his invisible attributes, namely, his eternal power 21 and divine nature, have been clearly perceived, ever since the creation of 22 the world, in the things that have been made. So they are without excuse.
 23 For although they knew God, they did not honor him as God or give 24 thanks to him, but they became futile in their thinking, and their foolish 25 hearts were darkened. Claiming to be wise, they became fools, and 26 exchanged the glory of the immortal God for images resembling mortal 27 man and birds and animals and creeping things. (Rom. 1:18-23) 28

29 Exposing the idolatry associated with such truth suppression, Romans 1 30 explicitly describes the nature of God’s clear revelation in creation, the 31 characteristics of unbelief in response to that perspicuous and authoritative self-32 disclosure, and the moral and intellectual antithesis that exists between the redeemed 33 and non-redeemed. According to biblical categories, one’s response to God 34 (including those matters of worship and religion) manifests one’s ultimate 35 commitments. Paul’s analysis of unbelief in Romans 1 prepares him to present the 36 gospel of Jesus Christ, which alone addresses all forms of unbelief and redemptively 37 untangles the binding cords of false religion that ensnare the heart. Redemptive

1 release in the gospel of Jesus Christ is cosmic, spiritual, categorical, transformative, 2 and permanent.

3 4 d. Revelation and Suppression

5 6 (1) Clarity

7 Several features stand out in the Pauline analysis of human sinfulness before 8 God. First, this revelation in creation—general revelation, as it is called—is 9 plainly revealed (Rom. 1:19) and clearly perceived (Rom. 1:20). Speaker and 10 hearer communicate with one another in an understanding way. This divine self-11 revelation is not abstract or even passive, but rather occurs because “God has 12 shown it to them” (Rom. 1:19b; cf. Psa. 19:1-6). Revelation comes personally, as 13 God himself is the personal agent who personally reveals himself in what he has 14 made. Thus, revelation delivers substance, real content. In other words, what the 15 recipient of revelation possesses is real knowledge of the one true God; by virtue 16 of his self-disclosure, all men know “all the divine perfections.”³⁶⁰ Grasping the 17 “god-ness” of God comes not by discursive process; rather this understanding is 18 “given to us, revealed to and in us, implanted in us, by the creative power and 19 providence of almighty God the Creator.”³⁶¹

20 21 In other words, what is known personally of God is his holy, mighty, just, 22 and awesome nature. Such knowledge is embedded in us, so that to have 23 consciousness is to have knowledge of the true God. Such knowledge delivers no 24 redemptive understanding or benefit, and for this reason, the special redemptive 25 revelation of Scripture serves as the only means of seeing God as Redeemer and 26 Savior. Creation exposes mankind to God as Righteous Judge; biblical revelation 27 exposes mankind to this same God as Righteous Redeemer (cf. Rom. 3:21-26).

28
29 To be clear, Paul makes here no allotment for generic theism or a mere 30 abstract sense of God; the sensus divinitatus makes all cognitive activity occur 31 with a prevailing awareness of the one true God. Man simply cannot think 32 without reckoning with the One who created him and granted him cognitive 33 function. Human thought is therefore necessarily a religious, covenantal act.
34 While Descartes issued the oft-repeated, “I think; therefore I am,” the Scripture 35 insists something personal and covenantal about our self-consciousness: “I think, ³⁶⁰ Charles Hodge, Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1994), p. 37. Scott Oliphint suggests that Hodge follows Calvin here. See Oliphint, Reasons for Faith, p.134 fn. 27.

³⁶¹ Oliphint, Reasons for Faith, p. 134, pp. 131-140; cf. Calvin, Institutes, 1.3.3.

1 therefore I know the ‘I am’ (the covenant God of Scripture)” or “I think,
 2 therefore I know God.” Even the unbeliever knows the personal God personally, 3 but not savingly. The unregenerate soul not only knows about the Creator, but 4 rather consciously and clearly faces the Creator’s personal, covenantal 5 communication. Even the unbeliever’s “knowledge is not only a knowledge 6 about God, but a knowledge of God himself (Rom. 1:21).”³⁶² In the creation 7 narrative in Genesis 1-2, the creation of mankind in God’s image is the creation 8 of man as son of God (cf. Luke 3:38). The imago Dei and sonship are mutually 9 explanatory concepts, framing the covenant relationship between man and God 10 as familial.³⁶³ Clear covenantal obligations roar within human consciousness 11 because of the imago Dei. Mankind can no more avoid that covenantal context 12 than a person can deny genetic identity, reneging his biological connections with 13 his father and his mother.

14
 15 As a means to express its personal immediacy, Paul frames divine 16 communication to mankind in terms of Speaker and listener; the Speaker speaks 17 clearly and the listener understands general revelation clearly. Paul can therefore 18 insist with absolute epistemic certainty the clear, covenantal consciousness of all 19 humanity, because “human life, even in deepest depravity, does not stand out of 20 connection with the revelation of God.”³⁶⁴

21
 22 (2) Accountability

23 Second, on the basis of this certainty Paul speaks to the scope of 24 accountability. The revelation and the understanding of that revelation have 25 occurred since the beginning of time (Rom. 1:20b). Accountability extends to all 26 people of all places, because the personal revelation of the Triune God of heaven 27 occurs through the creation itself. In other words, the revealed knowledge is not 28 an added component to be imported to creation, but rather is embedded in the 29 creation itself.

30
 31 Mankind dwells in covenantal relationship with the Creator. In other words, 32 every human is in covenant with God—as either covenant keeper or covenant 33 breaker. As descendants of Adam, all (before saving grace takes ahold) are 34 covenant breakers, making the covenant relationship one of curse rather than ³⁶² Frame, The Doctrine of the Knowledge of God, p. 50.

³⁶³ See Part One – Like Father, Like Son.

³⁶⁴ Berkouwer, “General and Special Divine Revelation,” p. 16.

1 blessing. Such culpability before the covenant-making God is conscious to all, as 2 God’s personal engagement in this disclosure efficaciously delivers immediate 3 accountability. The personal self-disclosure of God (“his eternal power and 4 divine nature”; Rom. 1:20) flows unremittingly because the living God has made 5 all things, including man himself, in such a way that proclaims God.

6 7 According to Scripture, this covenant relationship with the Creator God is 8 actual, historical, theological, and comprehensively critical. Covenantal 9 participation is not culturally or ethnically restrictive, as no human culture or 10 person is understood properly apart from this primary covenantal character of 11 human identity. Thus, valid contextual analysis begins with this comprehensively 12 determinative biblical paradigm—that of mankind in covenant with the Creator.

13
 14 This paradigm, what we will call the Covenant Identity Paradigm (CIP), lays 15 out two parallel yet mutually exclusive options (Romans 5; 1 Corinthians 15): 16 Adam is the head of all unbelieving humanity, whereas Jesus Christ is the head 17 of his church—those who trust in him by faith (cf. Ephesians 1-2). Everyone is 18 defined by one of these two heads. One’s covenant relationship, or more 19 particularly the specific covenant head to which he/she is connected, establishes 20 the inclusive biblical framework for identity. It is in view of this covenantal 21 relationship and the inescapable knowledge of the one true God—possessed by 22 every man, woman, and child—that Paul builds his case for comprehensive 23 accountability.

24
 25 Rather than claiming an esoteric or abstract identity, Paul describes human 26 accountability with a view to the moral law itself. To be in God’s image is to 27 dwell in unavoidable awareness of one’s covenantal, moral obligation to God 28 (WCF 7). Even those who did not receive the Law of Moses face the “work of 29 the law” is on their hearts (Rom. 2:14-16). The righteous demands of God are 30 components of the imago Dei, making mans’ moral fiber coextensive with his 31 humanity. In other words, we cannot speak of man in a biblical sense apart from 32 this engrained moral and personal accountability. To be a descendant of Adam is 33 to be morally and spiritually accountable to the covenant of God and to the God 34 of the covenant.

35 36 (3) Wrath Revealed

37 Third, and most significantly, is the place of the wrath of God against the 38 revelation suppressors/idolaters. Seeming impunity in the practice of false

1 religion renders no affirmation of false religion or of those practicing it; instead it 2 exposes the perseverance of God in the gathering all the members of his church.
3 Delayed eschatological judgment does not infer absence of current judgment on 4 unbelief (Rom. 1:18). As we will see below, permitted idolatry and increased 5 truth suppression are not evidence of commendation but of condemnation.
6

7 Romans 1:18 begins its exposé on man’s resistance by describing God’s 8 displeasure with the attempted revelational eclipse. In fact, the revelation of God’s 9 wrath is the emphasis of this entire section of Romans, as the epistemological, 10 moral, and doxological rebellion that characterizes sin’s aggressive action bring 11 about divine wrath. Divine disgust with unbelief, according to Paul’s analysis 12 here, results in divine release of unbelievers into further unbelief, further 13 suppression of the truth, further darkening of the mind, and further moral 14 corruption.
15

16 Three times in Romans 1, Paul contends that “God gave them up” (1:24, 26, 17 28) to their sinful acts and sinful thinking. In it all, professed knowledge delves 18 with deepening intensity into willful ignorance. Self-proclaimed wisdom 19 tragically and tyrannically manifests utter foolishness. “The human intellect is as 20 erring as the human heart. We can nor more find truth than holiness, when 21 estranged from God; even as we lose both light and heat, when we depart from 22 the sun.”³⁶⁵ Albeit with incomplete success, unbelievers spend a lifetime seeking 23 to silence the knowledge of their Creator whom they know, because as covenant 24 breakers they know they must face his wrath. Yet rather than turning to him and 25 seeking him for mercy, they turn away from him and suppress his revelation by 26 false belief, false religion, and false practice.
27

28 In other words, humanly devised religion and religious practice, in whatever 29 form they come, are the corporate manifestations of this truth suppression.³⁶⁶ 30 “They exchanged the truth about God for a lie and worshiped and served the 31 creature rather than the Creator, who is blessed forever! Amen.” (Rom. 1:25) 32 With variegated cultural sophistication and complexity, human religions flourish 33 around the world—and all of them growing manifestations of truth suppression, 34 divine wrath, and spiritual blindness. The creation and advance of these false 35 religions degrade humanity, and the promotion of these depraved religious, 36 moral, and intellectual claims intensifies religious culpability (Rom. 1:32).

³⁶⁵ Charles Hodge, Epistle to the Romans, A Geneva Series Commentary (London: Banner of Truth, 1972), p. 45.

³⁶⁶ These false religions are those all over the world, in the East and in the West; secular humanism is as culpably rebellious as are other formal world religions.

1
2 People of all religions pray, and they operate according to a conviction that 3 revelation validates their religious convictions and practices. They live by 4 particular norms, moral values, and priorities, and their lives function with 5 varying degrees of conscious commitment to these standards, which govern their 6 lives. “In their case the god of this world has blinded the minds of the unbeliever, 7 to keep them from seeing the light of the gospel of the glory of Christ, who is the 8 image of God” (2 Cor. 4:4). They remain inescapably bound to their covenantal 9 orientation, yet as covenant breakers they seek to fill God’s call to covenant 10 faithfulness with impostor covenant commitments—different gods, different 11 rituals, and different practices or even similar practices imbued with different 12 meanings. Despite the differences, commonalities exist: prayer, certain beliefs in 13 afterlife, moral standards, and often even blood sacrifices. True and false 14 religions ostensibly share certain strands of commonality.
15

16 While he does not deny these formal³⁶⁷ similarities between certain religious 17 activities, Paul radically polarizes believer and unbeliever according to the 18 spiritual, willful, and idolatrous orientation of the unbeliever on the one hand, 19 and the receptive and humble condition of the regenerated believer by the Holy 20 Spirit (cf. 1 Cor. 2:1-16) on the other.³⁶⁸ Redemptive knowledge by the 21 illuminating power of the Holy Spirit in the Word of God delivers the sinner 22 from the bondage of religious rebellion unto the freedom of biblically defined 23 religious obedience. Faith in Christ transfers one from one covenantal identity to 24 another (Rom. 5:12-21; cf. Eph. 2:1-10) and therefore from one covenant 25 allegiance to another.
26

27 Unbelief then is epitomized by false religion—its existence, its practice, and 28 its advocacy. Such unbelief includes secularism and nominalism, the peculiar 29 sects and cults throughout history, and each of the world religions, including the 30 sophisticated historic religions (like Islam) and the less formalized but no less 31 virulent religions, like the secular humanism of the West. In Romans 1, 32

33 the apostle sets forth the origin of that degeneration and degradation 34 which pagan idolatry epitomizes, and we have the biblical philosophy 35 of false religion. ‘For heathenism’, as Meyer says, ‘is not the primeval 36 religion, from which man might gradually have risen to the ³⁶⁷ By “formal” we mean ostensibly and externally similar. A pagan praying may look very much like a believer in Christ praying.

³⁶⁸ John Murray (“The Attestation of Scripture,” in The Infallible Word, op cit., p. 51) notes that illumination is “regeneration on its noetic side.”

1 knowledge of the true God, but is, on the contrary, the result of a 2 falling away from the known original revelation of the true God in 3 His works.³⁶⁹
4

5 In fact,
6

7 the most damning condition is not the practice of iniquity, however 8 much that may evidence our abandonment of God and abandonment 9 to sin; it is that together with the practice there is also the support and 10 encouragement of others in the practice of the same. To put it bluntly, 11 we are not only bent on damning ourselves but we congratulate others 12 in the doing of those things that we know have their issue in 13 damnation. We hate others as we hate ourselves. . . .³⁷⁰ 14

15 The creation and perpetration of religion which in any way suppresses revelation 16 (by neglect, marginalization or outright denial) is comprehensively wicked and 17 exposes moral culpability before the covenant God. Humanly contrived religion 18 boldly cries out opposition to God, and requires his judgment.
19

20 (4) Light and Darkness: The Spiritual Antithesis and the Gospel 21

22 In fact, Paul describes the revelation of divine judgment upon unbelief by 23 expounding God's incremental permission unto greater disobedience as judgment.
24 Paul builds the case for the categorical, covenantal antithesis between belief and 25 unbelief, or more precisely between believer and unbeliever. In so doing, he sets 26 up the covenantal antithesis that defines all mankind at all times everywhere. It is 27 on the basis of this antithesis that Paul and the entire canon of Scripture in Old 28 and New Testaments present the rich, radical, and powerful gospel.
29

30 There is real darkness and real light. To those in the real spiritual darkness, 31 real light comes only in and by the pure gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God 32 (Gal. 1:1-9). Fallen men and women, as they delight in darkness, will never come 33 to the light on their own because they cannot and do not want to (Rom. 8:5-8).
34 There is no salvation, therefore, apart from the Spirit of God regenerating/35 resurrecting the spiritually dead. Spiritual conversion, as an act of supernatural 36 grace, is essential. The Lord sovereignly applies redemptive grace to the one 37 dead in sins. "All those whom God hath predestined unto life, and those only, he 38 is pleased, in his appointed and accepted time, effectually to call, by his Word

³⁶⁹ John Murray, The Epistle to the Romans (1968; reprint, Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1990), p. 41.

³⁷⁰ Ibid., p. 53.

1 and Spirit, out of that state of sin and death, in which they are by nature, to grace 2 and salvation, by Jesus Christ” (WCF 10.1).
3

4 While in one sense spiritual awakening is instantaneous (we did not see 5 before and now by faith we see; we were dead in our trespasses and sins, but 6 raised with Jesus Christ; Eph. 2:1-10), the convert’s grasp of divine grace 7 deepens over time. In fact, the life of a believer in Jesus Christ involves a 8 progressive deepening of understanding in the gospel and confidence in 9 Scripture’s relevant authority in the face of temptations and pressures within and 10 without. Hebrews 5:12-14 describes the life of a believer as exercise! “For 11 though by this time you ought to be teachers, you need someone to teach you 12 again the basic principles of the oracles of God. You need milk, not solid food, 13 for everyone who lives on milk is unskilled in the word of righteousness, since he 14 is a child. But solid food is for the mature, for those who have their powers of 15 discernment trained by constant practice to distinguish good from evil.” 16

17 Growth in grace therefore is a process, and Scripture makes this process 18 abundantly clear. But this affirmation of spiritual maturity operates in the context 19 of the formulaic spiritual antithesis, wherein the spiritually dead becomes 20 spiritually alive by grace through faith. The seeds of truth are planted at various 21 moments in one’s life, and while the work of the Holy Spirit can be (an usually 22 seems to be) incremental, the nature of conversion is truly radical. Within God's 23 perfect knowledge, every human soul is either in the kingdom of darkness or, by 24 grace, in the kingdom of the Beloved Son (Col. 1:13). In biblical categories, there 25 exists no grey, middle kingdom. Everyone is linked to one covenant head (Adam 26 or Christ) and to one kingdom (darkness or light), though one’s understanding of 27 God’s redemptive and gracious transfer grows in the conscious experience.
28 Kingdom life is not defined first by human trajectory but divine transfer.
29

30 Thus, Scripture portrays salvation in terms that are categorical, paradigmatic, 31 ultimate, and wholly redefining. The move is from darkness to light, death to life; 32 the biblical core of redemptive grace is union with Christ in his resurrection (cf.
33 Eph. 1:16-23; 1 Corinthians 15) or, as described in John’s Gospel, new birth 34 from above (John 1:12; John 3:1ff). The powerful call of God, as illustrated by 35 Lazarus (John 11), is a matter of drawing one from death to life. This radical 36 character of redemption and conversion simply cannot be overstated, and must 37 categorically shape the way in which we speak about the uniqueness of the 38 gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ and his church. Scripture presents no spiritual 39 common ground for gospel proclamation, and in fact, contends that it is the 1 absolute incomparability and uncommonality of the gospel that grants it value.³⁷¹ 2 Bavinck captures both the theological concern and the practical outworking:

3

4 From a strictly theological point of view there is no point within 5 pagan thought which offers an unripe truth that can be simply taken 6 over and utilized as a basis for our Christian witness. If this is what is 7 meant by point of contact, then there just is none. But, practically 8 speaking, in actual missionary experience, we cannot avoid making 9 frequent ‘contact’; no other way is open. But, we must never lose 10 sight of the dangers involved, and we must ever endeavor to purify 11 the terms we have borrowed of their pagan connotations. . . . What we 12 preach is of an entirely different nature than what people ever could 13 have thought themselves.³⁷²
14

15 Having shut up everyone in sin (Gal. 3:22), Scripture leaves no ground for 16 religious neutrality. Naive appeal to general revelation and brute community 17 consensus is inadequate, because any proper application of general revelation 18 requires the Spiritually enabled application of the “Christian prudence” and “the 19 general rules of the Word, which are always to be observed.”³⁷³ In whatever 20 manner and to whatever degree man’s cultural and religious practices do not 21 allow special revelation to govern the application of general revelation, these 22 practices constitute idolatry. In their formal obedience, they advance spiritual 23 rebellion and face the wrath of the eternal Judge. True religion, by contrast, 24 typified by heart-motivated mercy and holiness in word and deed (cf. James 25 1:26-27), then cannot originate from unregenerate man. There is no feature of 26 man’s moral, religious, or cognitive capacities that remains untarnished by sin.
27 Zeal then for humanly contrived religion and religious practice—in their often 28 subtle yet permeating intellectual, epistemological, doxological, and moral 29 rebellion—constitutes the culminating manifestation of unbelief.
30

31 Scripture speaks unequivocally. Every man, woman, and child is either a 32 covenant keeper or a covenant breaker. It also makes clear that because of sin, all 33 those in Adam are covenant breakers. Jesus alone is the great covenant keeper 34 and it is in his work of covenant obedience that gospel hope resides. In view of 35 Adam’s failure to keep the original covenant with God (and thereby made all ³⁷¹ Though the Spirit of God can surely use even false representations of Christ as part of the means by which he draws unbelievers to himself (sometimes the Qur’an’s references to Christ are Muslims’ first exposure to him). References to Christ from the Qur’an ought never be used in a manner that implicitly affirms the Qur’an as divine revelation or accepts its inadequate portrayal of Jesus Christ.

³⁷² J. H. Bavinck, Introduction to the Science of Missions, p. 140.

³⁷³ WCF 1.6.

1 with him guilty), “the Lord was pleased to make a second, commonly called the 2 covenant of grace; wherein he freely offereth unto sinners life and salvation by 3 Jesus Christ; requiring of them faith in him, that they may be saved, and 4 promising to give unto all those that are ordained unto eternal life his Holy Spirit, 5 to make them willing, and able to believe” (WCF 7.3). It is the gospel of Jesus 6 Christ alone that confers covenant blessing, because as descendants of Adam, all 7 unbelievers everywhere dwell in covenant rebellion and are under the curse of 8 that covenant. Only those in Christ, those who have him by faith as their 9 covenant Head, receive the benefits of God’s grace. In Christ alone is true 10 religion.³⁷⁴

11 12 Thus the biblical CIP combats accommodation to all false religions, including 13 secular humanism and Islam. False religious faith systems, despite leeching upon 14 certain features of God’s truth in general revelation, are shaped by fallen 15 humanity and constitute strongholds of Satan. They, therefore, exert deceiving 16 influence upon those with whom they relate. Thus, Islamic belief and religious 17 practices cannot be treated with neutrality, any more than believers in the West 18 should treat their background in secular humanism as spiritually neutral.

19 20 As it relates to missions in the Muslim world, these factors should weigh 21 heavily. To be sure, a biblically directed application of Bavinck’s possessio 22 enables mature believers to discern which features of their culture can be 23 transformed by the Gospel and which must be rejected. Simultaneously the 24 biblical CIP will treat the sin of the unconverted heart with a full acceptance of 25 the moral, spiritual, epistemological and doxological antithesis presented in 26 Romans 1. Association with Islam, therefore, carries serious risks for any 27 professing followers of Christ, whether nationals or missionaries. Scripture 28 presents false religion as both false and deceiving, and no faithful missiology will 29 ever minimize the antithesis between biblical revelation and any other religion, 30 religious system, or faith system.

31 32 In view of the singularly pure gospel that comes by revelation of God in 33 Jesus Christ (Gal. 1:1-9), missions and missiology must give fullest attention to 34 these biblical analyses, as they comprehensively shape the contours of ministry 35 in any cultural context. The CIP grounds all human notions of identity, and 36 provides the biblical framework for interpretation of all cultures, societies,

³⁷⁴ “Religious worship is to be given to God, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost; and to him alone; not to angels, saints, or any other creature: and, since the fall, not without a Mediator; nor in the mediation of any other but of Christ alone” (WCF 21.2).

1 peoples, nations, and tongues. It is this paradigm as well, which shapes the way 2 in which believers should think of themselves in the unbelieving world around 3 them. Just as it did for Paul, the radical antithesis between belief and unbelief 4 provided the very basis for bold gospel proclamation, wherein the gospel of the 5 Lord Jesus Christ by the work of the Spirit confronts and combats the deeply 6 spiritual and relentlessly held commitments to unbelief and false religion. It is 7 this gospel message that the Church must unrelentingly proclaim and teach with 8 faithfulness.

9 10 Decisions about method of gospel outreach, how to discern proper social 11 connections, and how to relate in the world of unbelief must begin with the CIP.
12 Any other notion of identity – whether by personal perception or sociological 13 analysis – must submit to the objective data of Scripture, which presents this 14 universal covenantal framework for man’s identity, regardless of his cultural 15 context. Cultural factors are not denied by the CIP; they are instead properly 16 interpreted, explained and confronted. The practical outworking of the CIP comes 17 to greater clarity in Paul’s treatment of the believer’s identity and life in an 18 unbelieving culture. We turn now to 1 Corinthians for surveying these complex 19 matters.

20 21 e. Identity and 1 Corinthians

22 23 (1) Introduction

24 IM proponents frequently appeal to passages from 1 Corinthians in order to 25 provide exegetical warrant for insider methods.³⁷⁵ Two texts receive particular 26 attention in IM literature – 1 Cor. 7:17-24 and 1 Cor. 8-10. After surveying IM 27 opinion on these two passages, consideration will be given to the bearing these 28 passages have for the way in which believers ought to understand themselves in 29 relation to Christ and in relation to those around them.

30 31 (2) IM Exegesis of 1 Corinthians 7:17-24

32 As noted above, Rebecca Lewis has argued that one must distinguish 33 between the gospel and those cultural accretions that are said frequently to attend 34 the gospel. It is the former and not the latter to which believers in all times and 35 places are bound. She specifically cites 1 Cor. 7:17-20 in support of her 36 contention that “Paul emphasized the importance of the gospel not being linked ³⁷⁵ For bibliography and a survey of IM discussion of leading passages from 1 Corinthians, see Sleeman, “Origins,” pp. 517-8.

1 to changing cultures, even religious cultures.”³⁷⁶ Lewis notes that Paul is often 2 understood to say that “the Lord has assigned to each of us the family and people 3 group we are born into,” and that believers upon conversion ought “not remove 4 ourselves from that situation.”³⁷⁷ Lewis does see this understanding of the text as 5 a valid one.³⁷⁸ That point, Lewis contends, is nevertheless not the “crux of Paul’s 6 argument.” That crux is “that no one should consider one religious form of faith 7 in Christ to be superior to another.”³⁷⁹ Therefore “as believers we need to be able 8 to look past differences in religious culture and see the Holy Spirit working in the 9 lives of our fellow citizens of the Kingdom”—this is “so crucial to the integrity 10 of the gospel” that Paul “laid it down as a rule for all the churches” (verse 17).³⁸⁰ 11 Therefore, “if well-meaning Christians tell seekers that they must come to God not 12 just through Christ but also through Christianity, [we ought to] help the Christians 13 understand this requirement is ‘not in line with the truth of the Gospel (sic).’”³⁸¹ 14

15 What might motivate such persons to remain in their existing culture, a 16 culture that Lewis understands to be “religious” in dimension? Travis and 17 Woodberry have urged evangelism as one such motive and others, as Doug 18 Coleman has noted, undoubtedly exist.³⁸² Independently of considerations of 19 motive, Ridgway understands this text to be critical to the formation of the 20 insider’s identity. The insider has “spiritual identity,” which he defines as 21 “related to our second birth, when we become citizens of his kingdom. It has 22 nothing to do with our cultural and religious identity.”³⁸³ But the insider also has 23 “physical identity.” This identity is “related to our first birth, when we were 24 assigned (1 Cor. 7:17) a place and time in history (Acts 17:26) that determines 25 our cultural, social, and religious identity.”³⁸⁴ The believer is said, therefore, to 26 have two parallel and non-intersecting identities—the one spiritual, and the other 27 physical.
 28

³⁷⁶ Lewis, “Integrity,” p. 46. Emphasis Lewis’.

³⁷⁷ Ibid. In two footnotes, Lewis qualifies this statement by allowing for circumstances in which “people born into bad situations” may remove themselves to others, and in which Christians may “take on the missionary call to incarnate in another culture,” citing Paul as an example of the latter, “Integrity,” p. 48 fn. 9-10.

³⁷⁸ So Lewis, “Promoting Movements,” p. 76.

³⁷⁹ Lewis, “Integrity,” p. 46.

³⁸⁰ Ibid.

³⁸¹ Lewis, “Insider Movements,” p. 19. In support of this statement, Lewis cites 1 Cor. 7:17-19 among many other NT texts.

³⁸² Coleman, Theological Analysis, p. 183, citing in support Travis and Woodberry, “When God’s Kingdom Grows Like Yeast,” pp. 25, 28.

³⁸³ Ridgway, “Insider Movements,” p. 85.

³⁸⁴ Ibid.

1 IM readings correctly grasp a core principle that is at the heart of this 2 passage. Paul makes clear in verse 17 that he is speaking of a “life” that “the 3 Lord has assigned to him,” to which the Lord “has called him” before he goes on 4 to say that “this is my rule in all the churches.” So important is this point to Paul 5 that he repeats it twice, in verses 20 and 24.³⁸⁵ The Scripture’s presumption is 6 that a new believer will remain in and serve the Lord in the context of his family, 7 community, and vocation (1 Cor. 7:20).

8 9 IM readings of this text overlook two crucial statements in it. First, while 10 “circumcision” and “uncircumcision” are, with respect to one’s standing and 11 privilege in relation to Christ, matters of indifference, there is one matter that is 12 not—“keeping the commandments of God” (v.19).³⁸⁶ Second, when Paul 13 addresses the analogous matter of slavery and freedom, he stresses that the slave 14 is “a freedman of the Lord”—a freedom that always comes with the obligation to 15 keep the commands of Christ (cf. Gal. 5:1), and that the freedman is “a slave of 16 Christ,” that is under solemn obligation to serve Christ as Lord. In each case, 17 then, Paul emphasizes the believer’s fundamental allegiance and obligation to 18 Christ, precisely in the circumstances of family, community, and vocation in 19 which the believer finds himself. These circumstances may change and are, in 20 themselves, matters of comparative indifference. The factor that is both constant 21 and non-negotiable for the Christian is his absolute and fundamental commitment 22 to Christ’s lordship in those circumstances.

23
 24 So strong is this commitment that Paul can even envision a situation in which 25 a believer would need to alter his circumstances in order to be obedient to Christ 26 (see 1 Cor. 7:36).³⁸⁷ No believer is therefore in the position of maintaining the 27 dual and non-intersecting identities, one spiritual and one physical, for which 28 Ridgway pleads. Neither is Paul’s point in this text that one should not deem one 29 “one religious form of faith in Christ to be superior to another,” as Lewis has 30 argued. Tellingly, in drawing that conclusion, Lewis considers only verses 17-20.
 31 She does not take into account Paul’s discussion of slavery and freedom in verses 32 21-24. Paul, then, is not concerned to address issues specifically relating to a ³⁸⁵ So Nabeel Jabbour, The Crescent Through the Eyes of the Cross: Insights From an Arab Christian (Colorado Springs, CO: NavPress, 2008), p. 240.

³⁸⁶ So rightly Coleman, Theological Analysis, p. 187.

³⁸⁷ Though at times remaining in such contexts involves persecution—financial, physical, social, and emotional, as attested by centuries of persecution in the life of the Church, the gospel can and often does spread through the faithful witness of the suffering church under persecution by their communities. Avoidance of suffering is not a biblical motivation even in the perceived service of evangelism, and concern about persecution or rejection should never take precedence over gospel fidelity in the lives of Christ’s followers.

1 “religious form of faith” or “religious culture.” Paul’s point, rather, is that 2 wherever the Lord (Jesus) has called a believer to be, he must obey the Lord 3 (Jesus) in those circumstances.
 4

5 (3) IM Exegesis of 1 Corinthians 8-10

6 IM proponents often appeal to 1 Cor. 9:19-23, a passage that is embedded 7 within a much larger argument (1 Corinthians 8-10).³⁸⁸ Woodberry, for example, 8 speaks of both Jesus and Paul as “incarnating the gospel among people whose 9 worldview was similar to that of most Muslims,” and Paul in particular as 10 “liv[ing] out ... that model ... in different religio-cultural contexts.”³⁸⁹ It is in 11 this connection that he appeals to 1 Cor. 9:19-23. Woodberry proceeds to relate 12 this passage to Paul’s words in 1 Cor. 11:1 (“Be imitators of me, as I am of 13 Christ,” and to Paul’s actions in circumcising Timothy (Acts 16:3) and taking 14 “converts with him into the Temple to be purified” (Acts 21:26).³⁹⁰ Because 15 Woodberry understands “Islamic Law [to be] based on the Law of Judaism,” and 16 because Paul is said to “teach adaptability even to a pagan culture like Corinth as 17 long as one is guided by conscience and by the desire to glorify God and see 18 people be saved (1 Cor. 10:23-33),” he understands both Paul’s principles and 19 actions to have direct bearing on Insider paradigm methods and practices.³⁹¹ 20

21 As noted above in this report, it is mistaken to make direct application of this 22 text to Muslim circumstances without accounting for the redemptive historical 23 particularities of the texts in question. One may not, therefore, forge a close 24 connection between the Mosaic Law and subsequent Islamic legislation and, on 25 that basis, straightforwardly apply the text to individuals in a Muslim setting.³⁹² 26 One is not at liberty, in other words, to substitute the word “Jew” in this text with 27 the word “Muslim.”³⁹³
 28

³⁸⁸ In addition to the materials discussed here, see those cited at Sleeman, “Origins,” pp. 517-8.

³⁸⁹ Woodberry, “To the Muslim,” p. 24.

³⁹⁰ Ibid.

³⁹¹ Woodberry, “To the Muslim,” pp. 24-25. Elsewhere, Woodberry, writing with John Travis, observes that “Christians have assumed varying degrees of Muslim identity in an effort to ‘become all things to all men’ to ‘win as many as possible’ (1 Cor. 9:19-23),” “When God’s Kingdom Grows Like Yeast,” p. 9. These writers hasten to distinguish this action from “the decision of a Muslim to retain socio-religious identity,” while refraining from explicitly criticizing such an evangelistic strategy. Ibid. (emphasis original).

³⁹² Compare the argument, similar to Woodberry’s, of Kevin Higgins, “Inside What?,” p.79 fn. 16. While Higgins does take some care to distinguish Judaism from Islam, he nevertheless concludes that “at a very practical level, the early Jewish followers of Jesus faced much the same situation as do Muslim followers of Jesus today,” ibid.

³⁹³ As insinuated in the title of Woodberry’s article, “To the Muslim I Became a Muslim?”

1 What of Woodberry’s other argument that Paul is counseling “adaptability 2 even to a pagan culture like Corinth”? Woodberry is correct to highlight that the 3 gospel and the interests of the gospel may entail that one surrender certain 4 matters of cultural familiarity and comfort (1 Cor. 9:19-23, esp. v. 23). He does 5 not, however, highlight with commensurate emphasis Paul’s point that, in these 6 endeavors, the apostle was never “outside the law of God but under the law of 7 Christ” (9:21).

8 9 Paul’s words in 1 Corinthians 10 amplify the importance of the principle that 10 he articulates in 1 Cor. 9:21. Establishing an identity between the people of God 11 under the Old Covenant and the people of God under the New Covenant (1 Cor.
12 10:1-4), Paul likens the circumstances of the New Covenant church to Israel in 13 the wilderness (10:5-13) and against that background issues at least three 14 commands. He expressly prohibits idolatry, “do not be idolaters as some of them 15 were...” (10:7a), “Therefore, my beloved, flee from idolatry” (10:14). He further 16 warns them against “desir[ing] evil as they did” (10:6), and “indulg[ing] in 17 sexual immorality as some of them did” (10:8a). To do these three things is to 18 “put Christ to the test” and to subject the people of God to divine displeasure 19 (10:9a, 10:9b-10).

20
21 Paul develops this analogy between the New Covenant church and Old 22 Covenant Israel precisely because the sins that Israel committed in the wilderness 23 were tempting and threatening the church in Corinth—evil desire, sexual 24 immorality, and idolatry. Just as Israel sinned by compromising with the 25 immorality and idolatry of the Moabites (Num. 25:9, cited at 10:8b), so the 26 Corinthians are subject to compromise with the immorality and idolatry of the 27 pagan culture around them (1 Cor. 5:1-2, 6:12-20; 10:14-22; cf. 8:1-13, 10:23-28 11:1). Paul fears a spiritually destructive complacency among the Corinthians 29 with respect to these issues, and urges their continued vigilance against sin 30 (1 Cor. 10:12-13).

31 32 Tellingly, Paul frequently appeals in his argument to the believer’s union and 33 communion with Christ as a guiding principle for negotiating the moral questions 34 arising from Christian living in a pagan culture. Because we partake of the 35 Lord’s Table and the Lord’s cup—which is participation in Christ’s body and 36 blood—we therefore cannot “drink ... the cup of demons” or “partake of ... the 37 table of demons” (1 Cor. 10:16, 21-22). We are not only united to Christ and 38 commune with him, but we are also in fellowship with one another as members 39 of his body (1 Cor. 10:17). To this reality Paul makes direct appeal as he

1 counsels believers concerning whether they may buy in the marketplace meat 2 offered to idols (1 Cor. 8:1-13).³⁹⁴

3
4 In short, Paul acknowledges in 1 Corinthians 8-10 the complexities of Christians
5 living within a culture hostile to the faith. He does not counsel wholesale a 6 categorical extraction and separation from the world around us (cf. 1 Cor. 5:10).
7 Neither is he unaware of or indifferent to the genuine spiritual threats posed to 8 the Christian attempting to live in the context of the culture in which the Lord has 9 called him to live (cf. 1 Cor. 7:17-24). Paul’s instructions to the Corinthians 10 return to a fundamental guiding principle—the believer’s identity in Christ is the 11 covenant identity (CIP) by which all other decisions about relationships, 12 partnerships, networks, and practices are to be made. That identity requires one 13 to pursue holiness, whether within or outside of the social networks of which he 14 was part when he became a believer (1 Cor. 7:17-24,36; 9:19-23; 10:1-22); and 15 to exercise Christian freedom with the interests of the gospel in view, especially 16 the spiritual welfare of both outsiders and weaker brethren (1 Cor. 10:23-11:1; 17 8:1-13). It is in this sense, therefore, that Paul became “all things to all men”— 18 “he is willing to deny himself and do anything for the sake of the Gospel (sic) ...
19 as long as it does not violate Christ’s law.”³⁹⁵ Union and communion with Christ, 20 obedience to his commands, fellowship with his body, and concern for the 21 spiritual well-being of all those with whom the believer comes in contact—these 22 are the biblical principles and realities that inform and ground Christians as they 23 seek to serve Christ in the cultures in which they find themselves.

24 25 6. Conclusion: The Advance of the Gospel

26 In concluding the study and critique of Insider Movement principles, we return to 27 three of the resolutions approved within Overture 9 at the 39th General Assembly of the PCA 28 in 2011, which remind us of the biblical grounding of missions. Both the motivation and 29 method of missions stem from Christ Jesus as revealed in Scripture. With a view to Christ’s 30 lordship over all things, the Presbyterian Church in America

- 31
32 • Affirms that biblical motivations of all those who seek the good news of 33 Jesus Christ with those who have never heard or responded to the gospel 34 should be encouraged;

³⁹⁴ Notice Paul’s repeated description of the weaker individual as “brother” (8:11, 12, 13), specifically the “brother for whom Christ died” (8:11). To sin against him is to “sin against Christ” (8:12).

³⁹⁵ Georges Housney, “Would Paul Become Muslim to Muslims?,” in Christlam, op. cit., p. 69.

- 1 • Encourages PCA congregations to support biblically sound and appropriately
2 contextualized efforts to see Christ’s Church established among resistant 3 peoples; and
- 4 • Calls PCA churches and agencies to collaborate with each other and the 5 broader Church to discern and implement biblical authority in gospel 6 contextualization.

7 8 With these important resolutions in mind, this current report seeks to aid the Church 9 in biblical discernment for the proclamation of the gospel. Faithfully navigating cultural 10 contexts does not happen effortlessly, and bringing biblical authority to bear 11 comprehensively is demanding. It is also demanded. Faithful missions requires rigorous 12 biblical thought, scrupulous biblical application, and tireless biblical recalibration. Indeed in 13 the God-given calling to make disciples of the nations, the Church must deliver the pure 14 gospel. Gospel advance must surely be gospel advance. The Apostle Paul does not mince 15 words about the necessity for preserving the gospel message with the fullest integrity:

16
17 I am astonished that you are so quickly deserting him who called you in the 18 grace of Christ and are turning to a different gospel—not that there is another 19 one, but there are some who trouble you and want to distort the gospel of 20 Christ. But even if we or an angel from heaven should preach to you a gospel 21 contrary to the one we preached to you, let him be accursed. As we have said 22 before, so now I say again: If anyone is preaching to you a gospel contrary to 23 the one you received, let him be accursed. (Galatians 1:6-9)

24
25 The New Testament also does not leave negotiable the call to active participation in 26 the advance of the gospel around the world. The extraordinary privilege of carrying out the 27 divine errand of mercy—proclaiming the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to the four corners 28 of the earth, is indeed stunning. The responsibility for faithful witness is commensurately 29 great. Just as the Apostle Paul never tired of preserving the integrity of the gospel message, 30 he likewise never lost sight of the superabundant grace of God extended to him in the 31 stewardship of active and relentless gospel proclamation, the end of which is the glory of 32 God.

33
34 I thank him who has given me strength, Christ Jesus our Lord, because he 35 judged me faithful, appointing me to his service, though formerly I was a 36 blasphemer, persecutor, and insolent opponent. But I received mercy because 37 I had acted ignorantly in unbelief, and the grace of our Lord overflowed for 38 me with the faith and love that are in Christ Jesus. The saying is trustworthy 39 and deserving of full acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to 40 save sinners, of whom I am the foremost. But I received mercy for this 41 reason, that in me, as the foremost, Jesus Christ might display his perfect 42 patience as an example to those who were to believe in him for eternal life.
43 To the King of the ages, immortal, invisible, the only God, be honor and 44 glory forever and ever. Amen. (1 Timothy 1:12-17)

1 Paul continues in the following section of this letter to Timothy to remind him of the 2 sober stewardship that gospel proclamation requires: “This charge I entrust to you, Timothy” 3 (1 Tim. 1:18a). Likewise in his final letter to Timothy, Paul reiterates this sobriety in view of 4 the false teaching which surrounded them. “By the Holy Spirit who dwells within us, guard 5 the good deposit entrusted to you” (2 Tim. 1:14). Gospel ministry is a ministry according to 6 the Word of God and in the Spirit of God. Remaining faithful in gospel proclamation requires 7 rigor and critical self-examination, ever testing our message and methods not first according 8 to their perceived effectiveness, but foremost before the revelation of God in his Word.

9
10 The truth of the gospel, given by the revelation of God in his Word, is a message like 11 none other. It is God’s message to the lost, and as heralds of that message, the Church must 12 faithfully deliver the gospel. The stewardship entails obedience in two critical ways: gospel 13 advance and gospel advance. The Church must consciously, deliberately, sacrificially and 14 unrelentingly proclaim the good news. No matter what she may lose in temporal pleasures or 15 gain, the storehouse of divine blessing for those diligently participating in the Great 16 Commission overflows.

17
18 May the Church reclaim her vision and calling to preach the gospel and to reach the 19 nations. May the body of Christ worldwide recalibrate its vision of Christ and the advance of 20 the gospel according to Christ’s Word, so that a commitment to the gospel’s content will be 21 matched by obedience to the gospel’s Master: “Go therefore and make disciples of all 22 nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, 23 teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you. And behold, I am with you always, 24 to the end of the age” (Matt. 28:19-20).

25
26 May it be said of the Presbyterian Church in America what the Apostle Paul said of 27 the church in Thessalonica:

28
29 We give thanks to God always for all of you, constantly mentioning you in 30 our prayers, remembering before our God and Father your work of faith and 31 labor of love and steadfastness of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ. For we 32 know, brothers loved by God, that he has chosen you, because our gospel 33 came to you not only in word, but also in power and in the Holy Spirit and 34 with full conviction. You know what kind of men we proved to be among 35 you for your sake. And you became imitators of us and of the Lord, for you 36 received the word in much affliction, with the joy of the Holy Spirit, so that 37 you became an example to all the believers in Macedonia and in Achaia. For 38 not only has the word of the Lord sounded forth from you in Macedonia and 39 Achaia, but your faith in God has gone forth everywhere, so that we need not 40 say anything. For they themselves report concerning us the kind of reception 41 we had among you, and how you turned to God from idols to serve the living 42 and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the 43 dead, Jesus who delivers us from the wrath to come. (1 Thessalonians 1:2-10)

1 The implications of gospel advance in the world of Islam bear down with palpable 2 force. The Church must pursue faithful and effective gospel ministry to the Muslim world.
3 As it relates to Muslims, many in the West are guilty of fear and misperception, and need 4 correction in their views of Muslims and Islam according to Scripture. “We need to go 5 beyond mere tolerance of the Muslims in our midst.”³⁹⁶ For the effective ends of gospel 6 ministry to Muslims, Bassam Madany urges the Church to develop an “adequate knowledge 7 of Islamics,” but warns against “two extremes that have manifested themselves during the 8 twentieth century”: attempting to evangelize Muslims “without any proper knowledge of 9 Islam” and oppositely, becoming “so fascinated with Islamics that [we forget] the main goal 10 of Christian missions.”³⁹⁷

11 12 The renowned “Apostle to Islam,” Samuel Zwemer (1867-1952), who, following his 13 work in Muslim missions from 1891-1929, taught missions at Princeton Theological 14 Seminary from 1929 to 1938.³⁹⁸ A prolific author and careful thinker, he urged a biblically 15 discerning approach to Muslim evangelism. “We must become Moslems to the Moslem if 16 we would gain them for Christ. We must do this in the Pauline sense, without compromise, 17 but with self-sacrificing sympathy and unselfish love.”³⁹⁹ Such statements by Zwemer have 18 been frequently misunderstood and misapplied, leading to a blurring of culture and religion, 19 and to indiscretion in apologetic and missionary methods. But the abuses on one side 20 (degrees of syncretism) have often been met with countering abuses—misunderstanding, 21 fear, and apathy. Just as success in Muslim missions will not occur by syncretism, it will 22 never occur by ignorance and apathy. Only by the obedient pursuit of the millions of people 23 blinded by untruth of Islam, who desperately need the grace and forgiveness of Jesus Christ, 24 the Son of the living God, will such people enter into the promises of God’s covenant of 25 grace in Jesus Christ. Accordingly, to every Muslim inquirer, Zwemer urges us to present 26 Christ according to Scripture, and trusting the Spirit of God to take the Word of God and 27 allow it to do its might work, to lead the inquirer to consider the person and work of Jesus.
28 His approach is as simple as it is compelling: “We should press home the question Jesus 29 Christ put to His disciples and to the world, ‘What think ye of the Christ?’”⁴⁰⁰

30
31 The Muslim world needs the gospel. We must deliver that pure gospel and deliver it 32 faithfully. May the Spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ enable us to that end.

1 PART 3 – RECOMMENDATIONS TO CHURCHES

2
3 Churches, Missions, and Missionaries

- 4
- 5 1. Churches should strongly support the spread of the gospel among Muslims.
 - 6 2. Churches should embrace their responsibility for reaching the Muslims that are around 7 them and draw on the experience of the missionaries they support to identify and 8 implement effective ways of doing this.
 - 9 3. Churches should learn from the missionaries they support about the contexts in which 10 they serve.
 - 11 4. Churches have the right and responsibility to ensure that the work they support is faithful 12 to scriptural principles, yet should not micromanage the work of the missionaries they 13 support.
 - 14 5. Churches should recognize the complex and varying challenges and dilemmas facing 15 CMBs⁴⁰¹ and those who minister to them. Churches should respectfully seek to understand 16 their missionaries’ assessments of these challenges and dilemmas.
 - 17 6. Churches should support their missionaries’ efforts to faithfully and prayerfully discern 18 and apply biblical principles regarding discipleship, including identity in Christ.
 - 19 7. Churches should recognize the discernible overlap between Insider Movement 20 paradigms and other mission strategies.
 - 21 a. Churches should therefore as much as possible refrain from using the term IM to refer to 22 specific practices and approaches and instead address them individually without this label.
 - 23 b. Individual practices and approaches should be assessed on their own merits as they apply 24 in specific contexts and should not be opposed primarily on the basis of apparent 25 similarity to or association with IM.
 - 26 8. Where approaches or practices of a missionary appear questionable, churches should 27 seek to understand the missionary’s rationale in light of Scripture and the principles 28 outlined in this paper.
 - 29 9. Should these approaches or practices still appear to lack faithfulness in some respect, the 30 church should lovingly correct the missionary and assist in identifying adjustments/31 adaptations that the church can in good conscience endorse.
 - 32 10. Missions committees should pursue ongoing education concerning theology and missions 33 to enhance their competency in evaluating missionaries.
- 34

⁴⁰¹ Some prefer CMB (Christian of Muslim background) or even BMB (Believer of Muslim background) to MBB (Muslim Background Believer).

1 Representative Questions that Churches Can Ask of Supported Missionaries

- 2
- 3 1. What steps are you taking to ensure the ongoing discipleship and spiritual maturity of
- 4 new believers?
- 5 2. How do you help new believers understand and express their membership in the church
- 6 both locally and globally?
- 7 3. What challenges do you face in helping new believers understand their identity in
- 8 Christ? How have you addressed those challenges?
- 9 4. What are some of the challenges you have faced in helping gatherings of believers
- 10 mature in their practice of the marks of the church?
- 11 5. Describe the structure and functioning of the churches with which you work on the field.
- 12 6. How do the prayer, the sacraments, and public preaching of the Word operate in your
- 13 ministry?
- 14 7. What is your sense of mission and calling? How does your answer impact your ministry?
- 15 8. Have you read and reflected upon the report – “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two:
- 16 Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” – along with its Affirmations and
- 17 Denials? What are your thoughts about them?

CR 2013 Committee Report 2013

MR 2013 Minority Report 2013

NOTE: All page references in this “Analysis of Minority Report 2013” are to the Minority Report 2013 (MR 2013) as numbered in the PCA GA 2013 Commissioner Handbook. For immediate access, the MR 2013 is included in the current (2014) Commissioner Handbook, with previous page numbers included in the footer of the MR 2013. To read MR 2013, see p. 2333 of this document.

INTRODUCTION

The Minority Report Intends to be Supplemental, Simple, and Practical

TE Nabeel Jabbour submitted to the 41st General Assembly a Minority Report (CH 2013, pp. 2265-2330). The intent of the Minority Report 2013 (“MR 2013”) was to supplement the Committee’s Report 2013 (“CR 2013”). It argued that the committee’s work “would be made more complete if the assembly would make both the Committee Report and the Minority Report” widely available for study within the PCA (p. 2265). MR 2013 claims to “concur with most of the Committee Report in how it addressed Overture 9,” and to offer “some supplementary material that attempts to fill in some of the gaps” perceived in MR 2013 (p. 2269, cf. p. 2270, 2272). MR 2013 also claims to differ from CR 2013 in another respect. While MR 2013 commends CR 2013 for its “solid theology,” it presents itself as “simple and practical,” worded in “understandable language to the laity” (p. 2270, emphasis original).

The Minority Report is Not Supplemental, Not Simple, and Not Practical

In point of fact, for two reasons MR 2013 fails to accomplish either goal: First, it is not properly supplementary to CR 2013. It diverges theologically from CR 2013’s reasoning and conclusions at critical points. MR 2013 is, therefore, an alternative not a supplement to CR 2013. Second, MR 2013 is neither simple nor practical. It fails adequately to define crucial terms and concepts. It makes assertions and claims without sufficient substantiation. Its central paradigm for identity (PQRS model) is inherently unstable and unclear. Its ecclesiology is similarly vague. MR 2013, furthermore, ill equips the reader to apply these paradigms to ministry in the Muslim world. MR 2013 is lofty in its aspirations but vague in its applications.

The Minority Report Is IM-Friendly

MR 2013 liberally offers anecdotes drawn from the author’s long and fruitful ministry among Muslims. These anecdotes do not serve to illustrate the claims and the models put forward in MR 2013. They really function as proof for those claims and models.

1 The PQRS model, to take one important example, stands on the foundation of MR 2013’s 2 author’s observations and experiences in the Muslim world. In this respect, MR 2013 shows 3 kinship with IM writings – experience functionally supplants Scripture and confession as 4 providing the norms and categories to address missiological questions.

5 6 MR 2013 curiously ignores the very epicenter of the IM controversy – national 7 churches in Muslim lands. It is these bodies that have been most vocal in bringing IM 8 methods and practice to the attention of the broader church. MR 2013 hardly makes mention 9 of these churches’ biblical and confessional grievances and concerns with respect to IM. Far 10 less does it weigh and grant those concerns. On the contrary, MR 2013, while mildly critical 11 of some IM methods and practices, adopts a posture of general sympathy towards IM 12 proponents and bodies.

13 14 SOME SPECIFICS

15 16 The committee is grateful that MR 2013’s intent was to complement CR 2013. It is 17 equally grateful that MR 2013 sought to document specific matters where it believes that 18 complementarity exists (p. 2272). It is the committee’s position, however, that MR 2013 19 properly presents an alternative to CR 2013, rather than a complement or a supplement.

20 21 CR 2013 and MR 2013 Have Mutually Exclusive Understandings of Identity

22 MR 2013 addresses how an MBB is to negotiate the question of his identity.
23 According to MR 2013, a MBB need not “renounce [his] birth community and social 24 identity” but his “core identity in Christ should never be compromised” (p. 2289, emphasis 25 original; cf. p. 2296). MR 2013 distinguishes but never defines two of these three terms 26 (birth community, social identity, and core identity; cf. p. 2319).

27
28 MR 2013 attempts to answer this question of identity through its “PQRS” diagram 29 (pp. 2291-2310). Unfortunately, in defining these zones, which are said to represent 30 Christendom and the Muslim world, respectively, MR 2013 offers anecdotal illustration (pp.
31 2293, 2328) but no biblical and theological substantiation. On the contrary, this construct 32 leaves the reader with the impression that these zones are a reflection of the author’s 33 sociologically informed perception of both Muslims and Christians within the Islamic world.
34 MR 2013’s description of the interaction of Messianic Judaism and evangelical Christianity 35 in terms of the PQRS diagram only lends further confusion to an already unclear and 36 biblically unsubstantiated paradigm (pp. 2294-5).

37
38 How ought a new believer in the Muslim world relate to the culture around him? For 39 MR 2013, “Muslims in Zone R who are on a journey toward Christ might have one of two

1 callings, both of which are biblical options: 1) Surrender fully to Christ and get integrated 2 into Christendom, moving into Zone Q, or 2) Surrender fully to Christ and remain in Zone R 3 as salt and light among their own people in their birth communities” (p. 2293). MR 2013 4 presumably understands its discussion of 1 Cor. 7:17-24 to provide biblical warrant for these 5 two options. It fails, however, to relate these zones, and movement between these zones, to 6 the text. As a result, MR 2013 offers the reader neither biblical nor practical guidance how 7 to negotiate life as a Christian in these zones. An anecdote is offered to illustrate MR 2013’s 8 point that movement from Zone S to Zone R is a “process” (pp. 2295-6). Similarly, MR 2013
9 raises some pointed questions about the kinds of difficulties that many MBBs must address
10 while living within the Muslim world (pp. 2297-8). It offers, however, no biblical guidance 11 how to negotiate those difficulties.

12

13 MR 2013 distinguishes between what are termed “sinful and non-sinful aspects 14 within [sic] the birth communities of the Muslim world” (p. 2308). MBBs “who choose to 15 live as insiders within the Muslim world can live only within non-sinful aspects of their birth 16 communities (Zone R).” They will have to reject “sinful aspects of the Islamic culture and 17 theology in Zone S, mostly rooted in the Medinan theology, that contradict the teaching of 18 the Scriptures” (ibid.). They have inherited a “first-birth community identity” which is both 19 “non-sinful (Zone R)” and “sinful (Zone S)” (p. 2319). In Christ, they have a “second-birth 20 identity.” This new identity must “affect their belief system, their values, and their 21 relationships” (p. 2319). Other than appealing to the example of Daniel and his three 22 friends, MR 2013 offers no biblical guidance how to discern what are said to be sinful and 23 non-sinful aspects of the Muslim world (pp. 2319-21).

25 MR 2013 presents its understanding of identity as an alternative to what are said to 26 be two unacceptable options – the way in which some unnamed “IM proponents” “sugar-27 coat the tough texts in the Qur’an,” and the way in which some (also) unnamed “critics” of 28 IM “demonize all or most of Islam and see no place for MBBs to remain as salt and light 29 among their own people” (p. 2309). Positively, MR 2013 argues for “freedom within a 30 framework,” that is, “flexibility and creativity within the framework of the non-negotiable” 31 (p. 2302). While this is not all that MR 2013 says about the way in which an MBB is to 32 remain biblically faithful within what is said to be Zone R, MR 2013 fails to give specific, 33 biblical guidance concerning how this MBB is to live in such a context. When MR 2013 34 does address “Living in Zone R with No Deception” (pp. 2303-8) it proceeds to do so in 35 terms of two admittedly revisionary and controversial understandings of Islam. It counsels 36 living in accordance with a “core” of Islam – whether the “original” (versus the “folklore”) 37 Mohammed, or the earliest stratum of Mohammed’s teaching, as determined by source 38 criticism. Neither of MR 2013’s understandings of Islam stands within the mainstream of 39 Islamic theology. They have received as warm a reception in the Muslim world as the Jesus

1 Seminar has within evangelical Christianity. They are theoretically questionable and 2 practically untenable.

3 MR 2013's approach contradicts the exposition of Covenant Identity set forth in CR 4 2013 (pp. 2202-26). The Covenant Identity Paradigm (CIP) of the committee is drafted in 5 explicitly and foundationally biblical terms. Its understanding of identity is specifically 6 indebted to the way in which the Scripture speaks of human beings as "in Adam" and "in 7 Christ." It explores the way in which Paul in Romans 1 depicts the religious activity of those 8 "in Adam" in terms of idolatry and suppression. It underscores the spiritual antithesis 9 between covenant keepers (in Adam) and covenant breakers (in Christ). It is on this 10 foundation that CR 2013 proceeds to analyze Islam (p. 2220) and to formulate biblical 11 principles regarding the believer's life in and engagement with culture (see the expositions 12 of 1 Cor. 7:17-24; 1 Cor. 8-10, pp. 2221-6).

14 The approach of MR 2013, however, is not only inherently unclear and unstable, but 15 is also not defined in explicitly and clearly biblical terms. It is in that sense not biblical. It is 16 not clear to the reader that the way in which MR 2013 understands identity has been derived 17 from the Scripture. MR 2013 overwhelmingly develops its paradigm of identity in terms of 18 anecdotal illustrations and of the author's own sociologically informed perceptions of the 19 Muslim world. There is no indication that CR's understanding of covenant identity and 20 spiritual antithesis has informed MR 2013's paradigm or discussion.

21
22 MR 2013 models the type of confusion which ensues when one's pre-formulated 23 interpretation of culture/society is brought to the text of Scripture. Sociological factors 24 interpreted by the missiologist's appropriated analytical tools (sophisticated or anecdotal) 25 become the functional authority for both the biblical text and the contemporary situation.
26 Yet this must not be so. Biblical authority must bear directly on all interpretive analysis, 27 including the missiological, or it fails to remain functionally authoritative. Reaching the lost 28 with the gospel often serves as the rationale for such an approach to contextualization. We 29 dare not allow a Western culture grid to corrupt our cultural analysis, it is argued. Indeed 30 that is true. But we do not properly avoid imperialism or cultural hegemony by substituting 31 one cultural authority (or our sociological analysis of it) for another. The only way to avoid 32 cultural hegemony in any analysis is to allow the self-attesting and self-interpreting 33 authority of Scripture as received by the Church through the ages comprehensively to shape 34 our analysis. Regardless of the seemingly commendable motive for doing so, trust in an 35 imposed cultural analysis (PQRS or otherwise) is at the very heart of the IM paradigm, 36 which CR 2013 report critiques. Thus, albeit a soft version of it, MR 2013 is actually itself a 37 form of IM which (unwittingly?) supplants historic biblical orthodoxy and confessional 38 theology. MR 2013 author's PQRS paradigm serves as the functional authority for all other 39 analysis, including that of the biblical text.

1 CR 2013 and MR 2013 Have Incompatible Understandings of the Church

2 MR 2013 defines the church in terms of the “obvious (established) church,” the 3 “hidden (underground) church” and the “semi-hidden church” that stands between the 4 former two (p. 2311, emphasis author’s). MR 2013 dubiously asserts that the “hidden 5 (underground) church” is that of which the BCO speaks in BCO 4-5, “Christians whose lot is 6 cast in destitute regions ought to meet regularly for the worship of God” (cf. pp. 2317-8).
7 MR 2013 elsewhere identifies the “hidden church” with “C-6 people” on Tennent’s C1-C6
8 scale (p. 2313). These hidden churches, MR 2013 argues, should be permitted to influence 9 the societies of which they are part, as yeast leavens the dough (p. 2314). They may be 10 prevented from lapsing into syncretism when they are “mentored and coached by visiting 11 leaders who are gifted pioneer missionaries and sensitive Christian leaders from that same 12 culture whenever possible” (ibid., emphasis original).

13
14 In a section on “Ecclesiology,” MR 2013 proceeds to offer seven “essentials” or 15 “goals” for a “healthy church in a Muslim setting” (p. 2315). It offers two paragraphs of 16 counsel on leadership and the observance of the sacraments in these churches, appending 17 Scripture references to this counsel (pp. 2315-6). It exhorts churches to maintain the balance 18 between what is metaphorically said to be “centered-set and bounded-set thinking” (p.
19 2317). An anecdote from the author’s experiences in Egypt illustrates how MR 2013 20 understands these principles to work in practice (p. 2316).

21
22 MR 2013’s ecclesiology is problematic for several reasons. 1) It is vague. It fails 23 clearly to define terms. The closest MR 2013 comes to defining the church is in its seven 24 “essentials” or “goals” of a “healthy church in a Muslim setting.” These “essentials” or 25 “goals,” however, are so broad as to encompass many Christian societies other than the 26 church. For this reason they stand in tension with CR 2013’s discussion of the marks of the 27 church. The three-fold distinction between the “obvious,” “hidden,” and “semi-hidden” 28 church is not developed or defended biblically, and MR 2013 neither asks nor answers the 29 question how “C-6 people” can constitute a church. 2) For this reason, MR 2013’s 30 ecclesiology is also impractical. It offers lofty goals for church life, but no practical 31 guidance how those goals may be realized within the Muslim world. 3) Finally, MR 2013’s 32 ecclesiology is not evidently biblical. It certainly reflects the author’s experiences and 33 observations in the Muslim world and with Insider communities. It does not show serious 34 engagement with either the Scripture or the Westminster Standards.

35
36 MR 2013’s discussion of ecclesiology stands in marked contrast with that of CR 37 2013. CR 2013 offers a biblical and confessional survey of the doctrine of the church – the 38 church visible and invisible; the growth and extension of the church; the marks of the church; 39 the relationship between the Kingdom of God and the church. On that foundation, it proceeds

1 to engage specific IM understandings of the Kingdom of God and of the church. CR 2013 is 2 specific where MR 2013 is vague. CR 2013 is practical where MR 2013 is impractical. CR
3 2013 is biblical and confessional where MR 2013 is not evidently biblical and confessional.
4

5 CONCLUSIONS

6

7 In conclusion, MR 2013 has failed to demonstrate that it is a true supplement to CR
8 2013. In fact, CR 2013 is properly presenting an alternative to MR 2013. There is a clear 9 line of demarcation between the two reports. CR 2013 answers the concerns of Overture 9 10 biblically and confessionally. To the degree that it answers them at all, MR 2013 answers 11 the concerns of Overture 9 anecdotally. That is to say, MR 2013 leaves the reader with the 12 distinct impression that author's own observations of the Muslim world, as well as the 13 experiences of Christians within the Muslim world have played a leading role in informing 14 MR 2013's paradigms and conclusions. This dynamic is evident in MR 2013's discussion of 15 the church.
16

17 Furthermore, MR 2013, particularly in its PQRS diagram, has imposed a sociological 18 construct that functionally stands over, not under, the Scripture. In doing so, MR 2013 shows 19 its sympathies with the way in which IM proponents have asked and answered vital 20 missiological questions. MR 2013 is a (soft) IM document. While fully respecting the good 21 work that the author of MR 2013 has done in a lifetime of gospel witness to the Muslim 22 world, the committee believes that the approach of MR 2013 not only provides unacceptable 23 answers to the questions of Overture 9, but attempts to answer those questions in 24 unacceptable ways. The only approach that will provide clear guidance to MBBs and 25 Christian workers in the Muslim world is a thoroughly biblical and confessional one. It is 26 just such an approach that the committee has presented to the church in its report.

Christians of Muslim Background (CMB) Input

Christians from a Muslim background are the foremost experts concerning both how to understand Islam and how insider movements are perceived in their various cultures. Here are some of their comments. The received comments have not undergone grammatical or spelling corrections. A “CMB” is a Christian of Muslim background; an “MBB” is a Muslim Background Believer. Though these labels are often used interchangeably, some Muslims who convert to Christ prefer one over the other.

Questions

Q. What do you think of the insider movement in your country?

A. “I am totally against such ideas: that someone who has never been a Moslem and who does not fully understand the challenges faced by MBBs still wants to perscribe me how I should behave as a Christian. To give you as an example, why should I go to the mosque or call myself a Moslem if I am a secret Christian in Somalia? How can calling myself ‘a follower of Christ’ and going to the mosque open me doors to witness.” (Abdi Duale)

Q. Should CMBs be encouraged to call themselves Muslims?

- A. “Not only is this concept improper, it is like poison mixed into food. It is a great sin and clear hypocrisy [two-facedness] for a Somali Christian to say “I am a Muslim.” (Cabdisalaan)
- A. “Somali Muslims look on us as carrion, and this will only reinforce their mistaken idea of Christianity.” (Cabdisalaan)
- A. “The Muslims are saying, ‘If Christianity is right/true, then they would openly witness/display their faith and even be willing to die for it.’” (Cabdisalaan)

Q. Should believers and the gospel penetrate Islam like yeast in the dough?

- A. “Is infiltration idea biblical? We are not to infiltrate any religion, but totally transform and change. I agree with the Minority Report that IM is infiltrating into Islam. This is going into one’s culture and live therein by polluting it but not being set apart from it. So practically IMers are being infiltrated rather them infiltrating. The more they go backward the more they distant themselves from being salt and light for Christ.” (Edward Ayub)
- A. “Whether the MBB feels ‘called to stay relationally connected to their relatives and friends’ is almost a moot point. The community, not the M whether the MBB will stay. If it is predetermined that the MBB must stay in good status BB or missionary, determines

1 in the community, then he or she will likely need to remain a secret believer or deny the 2 beliefs that warrant expulsion by the Islamic community-namely, the Incarnation, 3 Crucifixion, and Resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ.” (Fred Farrokh) 4

5 Q. Can followers of Jesus have two identities: followers of Jesus and Muslims?

6 A. “An IMer proves his or her sectarian identity on Islam by death – by how the 7 Muslims view and accept him as Muslim and bury. This has become a huge issue of 8 focus since many IM leaders are dying. They are proving to Muslims that they were 9 real Muslims. So their funeral service and burial are conducted by the Muslim clerics 10 in Islamic way. Two questions may arise here: First why do Muslims at least 11 relatives try to bury in Islamic way? Conversion is to them a one-generation issue so 12 the relatives want to kill the influence of the converted after death. In the Muslim 13 majority countries, even the graveyards preach Christianity.” (Edward Ayub) 14 A. “My friend, the message of the Gospel offends Muslims. Don’t worry! I have never 15 seen a Muslim convert to Christ who was not offended first before coming to the 16 saving knowledge of Christ. We need to offend them by being very clear about the 17 teachings of Christ!” (Fikret Bocek)

18

19 Q. Should followers of Christ enter the mosque?

20 A. “To enter the mosque is to ‘reconcile/agree with Satan,’ to agree to work together to 21 bury the cross, and God’s entire plan for which He intended the cross.”
22 (Cabdisalaan)

23 A. “Church should be cautious in finding commonality between Christianity and Islam 24 – Islam applied this strategy to reach Christians, the followers of already existing 25 religion. Islam contextualised to win Christians. By learning and applying their 26 strategy would be suicidal for Christian church. There is no common ground between 27 Islam and our faith.” (Edward Ayub)
28

29 Q. Should followers of Christ revere Muhammad? (“Muslim background believers 30 (MBBs) can live with integrity within the Muslim world by honoring Muhammad 31 as a leader without revering him as a Prophet.”)

32 A. “And for Somali Christians, let them say anything, whether ‘Muhammad was a leader 33 or a skilful man,’ nothing beneficial will come of it.” (Cabdisalaan)

34 A. “The problem with this . . . is that honouring Muhammad as a leader but not a prophet 35 is not an option in the Muslim world. Muhammad is not being presented as a leader, 36 but as the final prophet whom the world must obey and emulate. In short, the [such 37 an argument] is presenting an option that is not an option.” (Fred Farrokh)

4 Reformation theology from the sixteenth through eighteenth centuries, reacting 5 against a variety of errors in the Medieval Church, emphasized the role of right doctrine 6 (orthodoxy) in conjunction with both right behavior (orthopraxis) and inward devotion 7 toward God. True knowledge about God, derived from the Bible with the aid of human 8 reason guided by the Holy Spirit, led men to trust and serve God. Evangelism, the spread of 9 pure Christianity, assumed a prominent role, so that committed Protestants were known as 10 "evangelicals."¹ John Calvin spoke against the attitude of "Nicodemites" who, in order to 11 avoid the persecutions rampant in that day, remained within the Roman Church in name and 12 in worship while privately professing evangelical beliefs.² 13

14 Christians initially saw Enlightenment philosophy as a tool to discover the workings 15 of God's world. However, from the seventeenth century onward, the expanding claims of 16 secular science posed a series of challenges to Christian doctrine itself, relegating Biblical 17 truth to successively smaller areas of human experience. By the nineteenth century, 18 theologians in the wake of the German scholar Friedrich Schleiermacher employed the tools 19 of scientific "higher criticism" to challenge the divine unity and truth of the Bible itself, 20 heralding the birth of theological liberalism. Christian faith was defined not in terms of 21 orthodox beliefs, but in terms of a more generic "Jesus experience" which might even be 22 found in those who professed a religious affiliation other than Christianity, or no affiliation 23 at all. Fundamental Christian doctrines such as the deity and resurrection of Christ came 24 under fire, resulting in academic responses³ by a group of conservative scholars whose 25 adherents became known as "fundamentalists." Despite such efforts, by the early twentieth 26 century, liberalism had captured the main institutions of Christian scholarship in both 27 Europe and America.
28

29 Doctrinally orthodox Christians pursued two strategies in response to this challenge: 30 separatism, and rapprochement. The separatist strategy involved formal ecclesiastical 31 separation, with conservatives abandoning liberal-controlled institutions and setting up 32 competing organizations. In the 1920s, Princeton Seminary professor J. Gresham Machen, a 33 minister of the Presbyterian Church (USA), led a group of ministers and students to found 34 Westminster Seminary and the Independent Board for Presbyterian Missions. Upon his 1 defrocking by the PC(USA) on charges of schism, he helped to found a denomination which, 2 after its own internal schism, was eventually known as the Orthodox Presbyterian Church.

3

4 Other groups would leave the "mainline" Presbyterian denominations to form the 5 Presbyterian Church in America (PCA, founded 1973, with a "joining and receiving" of the 6 Reformed Presbyterian Church, Evangelical Synod denomination in 1982) and the 7 Evangelical Presbyterian Church (EPC, founded 1980, with another exodus of "New 8 Wineskins" PC(USA) churches joining in 2005-2012). The PC(USA) steadily lost members, 9 from a high of 4.25 million members in 1965 to its end-2011 report of 1.96 million 10 members.⁴
11

12 In contrast to separatism, the rapprochement strategy saw the training and 13 installation of conservative PC(USA) pastors as the best hope for renewed denominational 14 orthodoxy. Westminster graduate Harold Ockenga, supported by radio pastor Charles Fuller, 15 founded Fuller Theological Seminary in Pasadena, California for this purpose in the 1940s, 16 drawing its original faculty from conservative institutions such as Wheaton College, Moody 17 Bible Institute, and Dallas Theological Seminary.⁵ Superficially the founding of a new 18 seminary followed a separatist course, but only to facilitate the training of new pastors who 19 would retain institutional and personal connections with the denomination of their youth (a 20 rapprochement value), infiltrating like yeast to leaven the whole with re-invigorated 21 conservative ideology.
22

23 With rapid growth, the need to placate wealthy board members, and a desire for 24 acceptance by the presbytery of Los Angeles came the pressure for doctrinal laxity in order 25 to fill additional faculty slots. Ockenga, though nominally the seminary's president, never 26 gave up his pastorate on the East Coast; nor did the busy Charles Fuller participate in day-27 to-day seminary activities, contributing to a leadership vacuum on-site. Fuller's son Dan, 28 freshly returned from doctoral studies in Switzerland under Karl Barth, eventually took the 29 seminary's deanship. In line with Barth's neo-orthodox views, and unlike the original faculty 30 of Fuller Seminary, Dan Fuller denied the inerrancy of the Bible in historical matters.
31 Within a few years, the conservative founding faculty members had departed and would 32 become vocal critics of Fuller Seminary's new direction. By the 1960's, the "inerrancy 33 clause" had been excised from the school's statement of faith altogether,⁶ and in the 1970's

6 Christian backgrounds, Fuller Seminary remains a potent force in shaping evangelical culture.

ATTACHMENT 5: God and Allah

In 2007, a group of Islamic scholars issued "A Common Word Between Us and You,"⁷ a document reflecting on perceived commonalities between Christianity and Islam as hopeful grounds for ongoing peaceable interactions. That document referred regularly to "God" as one of the commonalities. Scores of Christian organizations responded,⁸ most notably in an open letter, "Loving God and Loving Neighbor," signed by hundreds of Christian leaders.⁹ This response affirmed "love of God" as a common ground between Christians and Muslims.

Is such a stance well founded? Terminology frames and influences the outcome of any debate; therefore, terminology itself becomes a matter of debate. Recognizing the formal similarities and differences between Muslim and Christian conceptions of deity, such debates may seem akin to debating whether the glass is half-full or half-empty. Yet the answers to such questions uncover one's assumptions about language, philosophy, and religion. Is "God" a "common word" between Islam and Christianity? What is gained and what is lost by answering, "Yes," or by answering, "No"?

Arguments favoring translation as "God"

1. The etymological argument

Most linguists agree¹⁰ that Allah derives etymologically from a family of Semitic words for deity including Hebrew terms such as El and Elohim, with a root emphasizing strength and authority. Historians point to the appearance of Allah and similar words for deity prior to the life of Muhammad, who, according to tradition, intended to point men away from polytheism back to monotheism, in particular the monotheism he perceived as shared by Christianity and Judaism. "We believe in that which has been revealed to us and revealed to you. And our God and your God is one; and we are Muslims [i.e. "in submission"] to Him."¹¹

As seen in Part One of this committee's report, Bible translators regularly face the need to adopt terms found in a target language, redefining them rather than rejecting them

¹⁰ "The use of the term 'Allah' should be considered the same as translating the Hebrew, Greek, or Aramaic terms as the English word 'God.'" Divine Familial Terms: Answers to Frequently Asked Questions, as updated on February 24, 2012, <http://www.wycliffe.org/SonofGod/QA.aspx>, (accessed December 13, 2012).

¹¹ Sura 29:46.

1 outright. Some protest that the term Allah is hopelessly contaminated by past association 2 with a moon god or some other false deity in pre-Islamic Arabia. Whatever the truth of such 3 historical claims, that etymological fallacy would also forbid God's people to use Greek 4 theos, English "God", Hebrew El, and other terms previously applied to pagan deities.

6 2. The reciprocity argument

8 Lamin Sanneh opens his article on "Do Christians and Muslims Worship the 9 Same God?" by posing the question, "Is the 'Allah' of Arabian Islam the same 10 as the 'Allah' of pre-Islamic Arab Christianity?" . . . This is, I think, a better 11 way to grasp the central issue, rather than asking if God and Allah are the 12 same. The way it is traditionally posed all too easily derails the whole issue 13 into a discussion about etymology. . . . [T]he word "Allah" as used by 14 Muslims is now tied to a particular religious community that holds to the text 15 of the Qur'an as sacred and revelatory. The exact same word "Allah" as used 16 by Arabic-speaking Christians is also tied to their own religious community 17 and traditions that hold the Bible as sacred and revelatory.¹²

19 This quotation from Timothy Tennent illustrates the general consensus endorsing the 20 centuries-old practice in which Arabic-speaking Christians refer to Allah as the object of 21 their worship, with context clarifying whether Allah should be understood with its Islamic 22 meaning set or its Christian meaning set. If Allah serves both roles in the Arabic tongue, 23 should not "God" serve both in English? And conversely, if Muslims do not "worship God" 24 (that is, if the implied predicates applied to "God" are not in some degree culturally determined) 25 then how can Arabic-speaking Christians conscionably say in their own tongue that they 26 worship Allah, a practice at least as old than the European practice of worshipping "God"?

28 3. The argument from monotheism

29 If there is only one true God, then anyone who says he intends to "worship God" 30 necessarily worships this one true God, since there is no other. Christian apologetics against 31 Mormons, Jehovah's Witnesses, Unitarians, and other non-Trinitarian offshoots of 32 Christianity generally refer to "God" as the object of worship in those faiths, even when the 33 characteristics and attributes applied to that label grievously fail to capture biblical truth.
34 Islam too has roots in Jewish and Christian concepts of deity, though heavily distorted.

36 4. The pragmatic argument

37 If the "Yes" and "No" arguments were philosophically and theologically at stalemate, 38 pragmatic considerations might tip the balance in favor of the path of least resistance. Islam

¹² Timothy Tennent, Theology in the Context of World Christianity (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 2007), p. 32.

1 normatively conditions Muslims into a staunch monotheism that identifies Allah with the 2 God of the Bible, accusations of corruption in the Bible notwithstanding. Humanly speaking, 3 the evangelist has fewer hurdles to cross in redefining what a Muslim thinks God is like, if 4 he must not also convince the Muslim that, contrary to Qur'anic protestations, the God of the 5 Bible is a completely different being. Even considering a lesser goal of peaceful coexistence, 6 Miroslav Volf argues that if "Muslims and Christians worship the same God, albeit partly 7 differently understood, the love of each other for God will help them lives together and 8 make neighborly love easier."¹³ Again, such pragmatic considerations should not operate in 9 the face of a strong theological objection against their pursuit, lest the end attempt to justify 10 the means.

11

12 Arguments favoring translation as "Allah"

13

14 1. The clarity of referentiality argument

15 Terminology should clarify boundaries between competing ideas. When discussing 16 the distinctive ideas of Islam and Christianity, lack of distinctive terminology encumbers 17 debate. One can construct a bulky term (e.g., "The Islamic concept of deity") or neologism 18 ("Islam-God") or acronym (e.g. "I.C.o.D."). Or one can simply use a term already closely 19 associated with those ideas (e.g., Allah) without denying that such a term has other meanings 20 in other settings (for instance, when used by Arabic Christians). Covenant theologians speak 21 of "dispensations," and dispensationalists speak of God's "covenants," and yet the terms 22 "Covenant Theology" and "Dispensationalism" have acquired historical definitions flexible 23 enough to accommodate such overlapping vocabularies while minimizing confusion.

24

25 2. The Christological argument

26 ". . . [T]he one who rejects me [Jesus] rejects him who sent me." (Luke 10:16).
 27 Exegeting this verse, John Piper argues that since Islam denies crucial truths about Jesus 28 taught in the Bible (his deity and eternal sonship, his atoning death and resurrection, et al.), 29 Christians do evangelism a grave disservice to treat Muslims as misled worshipers of the true 30 God and the historical Jesus, rather than as worshipers of a false deity. "Jesus is the litmus 31 paper as to whether or not we are talking about the same God."¹⁴

32

33 This argument assumes that Muslims do "reject Jesus." The application of this phrase 34 seems clear with respect to those who persecuted Jesus in the flesh, but how does it apply 35 today? Muslims think of themselves as rejecting false claims about Jesus, rather than Jesus 36 himself, but this does not mean that their self-assessment reflects God's assessment. Nor are 37 such thoughts exclusively Muslim; many a non-evangelical Westerner finds cause to praise

1 some aspect of Jesus while rejecting the biblical witness to the identity and work of Jesus. Is 2 the Qur'anic character of 'Isa "the same person" as Jesus? The 'Isa/Jesus debate, briefly 3 assayed in Part One of this report, mirrors the Allah/God debate in many respects.
4

5 Mixed Data

7 1. The Historical argument

8 Early Renaissance churchmen split on whether to describe the Muslim conquerors of 9 Constantinople as worshipers of "God." Pope Urban II spoke of "the Persians, an accursed 10 race, a race utterly alienated from God, a generation forsooth which has not directed its heart 11 and has not entrusted its spirit to God . . ." ¹⁵ Pope Pius II felt similarly, but Nicholas of 12 Cusa, a future Roman cardinal, argued for rapprochement with Muslims based on the 13 perceived worship of a common God which Muslim errors obscured but did not demolish. ¹⁶ 14

15 Martin Luther, criticizing the Turkish Muslims of his day as warlike, commented 16 that they "think they are doing God service" and describes Muhammad's belief in the 17 inadequacy of the Bible: "Therefore God has had to give another law, one that is not so hard 18 and that the world can keep, and this law is the Koran." ¹⁷ In both cases, Luther used "God" 19 (German Gott) to identify the object of Islamic devotion.
20

21 Unlike Luther, John Calvin denied the term "God" to the object of Islamic worship, 22 and indeed to the object of all non-Christian worship, even that of contemporary Jews.
23 Comparing Muslims to Jews who professed to follow God yet denied God's Christ, Calvin 24 mentioned, "the Turks in the present day, who, though proclaiming, with full throat, that the 25 Creator of heaven and earth is their God, yet by their rejection of Christ, substitute an idol in 26 his place." ¹⁸ Similarly elsewhere: "Turks, Jews, and such as are like them, have a mere idol 27 and not the true God. For by whatever titles they may honor the god whom they worship, 28 still, as they reject him [Jesus] without whom they cannot come to God, and in whom God 29 has really manifested himself to us, what have they but some creature or fiction of their 30 own?" ¹⁹
31

32 Samuel Zwemer's seminal volume The Muslim Doctrine of God (1905) explored the 33 vast chasm between the biblical and Qur'anic conceptions of deity. Zwemer used the terms 34 "God" and "Allah" interchangeably when speaking of the object of Islamic worship. Such 1 usage, assumed as correct without a perceived need for defense, was common among 2 missionaries such as W. R. W. Gardner, an early twentieth century missionary to Muslims in 3 India, who used "God" in discussions of both Christianity and Islam while emphasizing that 4 the two religions "have also so much in contrast—we might better say in contradiction—that 5 there is no possibility of reconciling the two."²⁰ English versions of the Qur'an usually 6 render Allah as "God," excepting that Muhammad Marmaduke Pickthall, a British convert to 7 Islam, retained Allah in his translation of the Qur'an on the grounds that, "there is no 8 corresponding word in English."²¹

10 2. The Biblical argument

11 Thus says the LORD, the King of Israel
 12 and his Redeemer, the LORD of hosts:
 13 "I am the first and I am the last;
 14 besides me there is no god [Hebrew elohim]
 15 Fear not, nor be afraid;
 16 have I not told you from of old and declared it?
 17 And you are my witnesses!
 18 Is there a God besides me?
 19 There is no Rock; I know not any."

20 He takes a part of it and warms himself; he kindles a fire and bakes bread.
 21 Also he makes a god [Hebrew el] and worships it; he makes it an idol and 22 falls down before it. (Isaiah 44:6, 8, 15)

24 But I am afraid that as the serpent deceived Eve by his cunning, your 25 thoughts will be led astray from a sincere and pure devotion to Christ. For if 26 someone comes and proclaims another Jesus than the one we proclaimed, or 27 if you receive a different spirit from the one you received, or if you accept a 28 different gospel from the one you accepted, you put up with it readily 29 enough. (2 Corinthians 11:3-4)

31 Therefore, as to the eating of food offered to idols, we know that "an idol has 32 no real existence," and that "there is no God but one." For although there 33 may be so-called gods in heaven or on earth—as indeed there are many 34 "gods" and many "lords"—yet for us there is one God, the Father, from 35 whom are all things and for whom we exist, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, 36 through whom are all things and through whom we exist. However, not all 37 possess this knowledge... (1 Corinthians 8:4-7)

²⁰ Gardner, op.cit., p. 7.

²¹ Cited in Tennent, Theology in the Context of World Christianity, p. 46.

1 The scare-quotation marks around "gods" and "lords" in the ESV translations above 2 make explicit a nuance implicit in the underlying Greek text of 1 Corinthians 8. In one 3 sense, many "so-called" (Greek λεγόμενοι) gods exist conceptually, for men proclaim deities 4 under many different names, or under the same name yet with different characteristics 5 (hence "another Jesus" in 2 Corinthians 11). Yet in another sense, above those many 6 competing conceptions of the divine, in reality only one God exists. Thus Isaiah prophesies 7 in one breath that only one God exists, while in the next breath allowing that a carpenter can 8 make a god which is an idol. Using the language of Romans 1, those who know God 9 exchange his glory for that of an image resembling elements of creation.

10

11 All Christians should exercise humility and forbearance in discussing complex issues 12 of culture and language, keeping in mind that none of these divine titles derive from the 13 name which God revealed to his covenant people during his mighty work of deliverance 14 from Egypt, the name which appears over 6,500 times in the Old Testament: "God spoke to 15 Moses and said to him, 'I am the LORD [Hebrew Yahweh]. I appeared to Abraham, to Isaac, 16 and to Jacob, as God Almighty [Hebrew el shaddai], but by my name the LORD [Yahweh] I 17 did not make myself known to them.'" (Exod. 6:2-3)

MINORITY REPORT
AD INTERIM STUDY COMMITTEE ON INSIDER MOVEMENTS

REALITIES ON THE GROUND
MARCH 19, 2014
AN ADDITIONAL PERSPECTIVE

MINORITY REPORT SUBMITTED BY PCA AD INTERIM STUDY COMMITTEE ON INSIDER MOVEMENTS MEMBERS

TE Nabeel Jabbour
RE Tom Seelinger

PREFACE

More than anything else, we desire in this report (hereafter MR 2014) to present a tone of expectant faith that the gospel of Jesus Christ can and will spread and transform the Muslim world, just as it has done in other times and places. We are at a unique time in history: the gospel is already beginning to take root around the Muslim world,¹ and we rejoice in what God is doing. We hope and pray that the additional perspective in this report will provide practical help to PCA churches, assisting them in their broad sowing of the message of God’s saving power through his Son and the building of his church throughout Muslim nations, “...that your ways may be known on earth, your salvation among all nations” (Psalm 67:2).²

After providing introductory context to this report, we will describe five realities faced by believers living in Muslim societies and treat four considerations that undergird and inform our approach to mission in the midst of these realities. A list of questions for use by missions committees with their missions partners is also included. An outline of our major topics follows.

Part One: Realities on the Ground Facing Muslim Background Believers (MBBs)

- Reality #1: It is Important that MBBs Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.
- Reality #2: MBBs Can Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.
- Reality #3: National Churches within Muslim Societies Do Not Always Accept MBBs.
- Reality #4: Living within Muslim Societies Requires MBBs to be Vigilant to Avoid Syncretism.
- Reality #5: Growing in Christ within Muslim Societies Holds Significant Challenges for MBBs.

Part Two: Biblical Considerations for Facing Realities on the Ground.

- Consideration A: Every Culture has “Good” and Evil Aspects.
- Consideration B: We Must Not Add Requirements to the Gospel: Principles from the Jerusalem Council of Acts 15.
- Consideration C: We are Called to Live in the World But Not of the World: 1 Corinthians 7:17-24 and its Context.
- Consideration D: We Must Not Participate with Demons in False Worship: A Warning from 1 Corinthians 10:19-20.

In this newly released book there are nine chapters where Garrison describes the movements of the gospel in the nine main regions of the Muslim world, with a summary on page 18. The scale of movements to Christ in the Muslim world which he describes is unprecedented.

1 Part Three: Additional Recommended Questions for PCA-Supported Missionaries in 2 Muslim-Majority Contexts.
3

4 We wish to express our appreciation for the work presented in the committee report 5 (hereafter CR) in providing vital, biblical foundations and principles toward the church's 6 faithful obedience to the Great Commission. We also appreciate the theological critique of 7 Insider Movement (IM) methodology and the provision of Affirmations and Denials that 8 churches and missions committees can use in either planning or evaluating mission efforts.
9 We submit this present report, "Realities on the Ground" March 19, 2014, as a perspective 10 that is additional to that of the CR, and serves as a further aid to those encountering 11 unfamiliar realities in the course of ministry to Muslims. We do not present this report as an 12 alternative to the committee report for two reasons.

13
14 The first is that the majority has already done significant, able work with which we agree 15 and which we need not reproduce. The second is that our contribution is of a different kind; 16 this is a report that shares selected realities encountered in the course of pursuing gospel 17 mission among Muslims. Along with these, we include additional reflections from Scripture 18 related to those realities. We make no claim that our observations and reflections are 19 comprehensive. However, we do believe they are significant and warrant attention on the 20 part of those in the PCA studying mission to Muslims and insider movements. The PCA 21 needs both to ground its mission efforts biblically and to be prepared for realities its mission 22 partners will encounter in the course of doing mission.

23
24 We are grateful for our brothers and fellow members of the Study Committee on Insider 25 Movements (hereafter SCIM), and express deep appreciation for the time the seven of us 26 spent working together. Indeed, we believe the SCIM functioned at its best when working 27 closely together as we did in producing the Affirmations and Denials (see Section B of the 28 Committee Report for the full listing of the A's and D's, along with their introduction). The 29 A's and D's from 2013 were the joint effort of all seven members, and we seek to demonstrate 30 their importance in examining the realities on the ground. We are sure that the present paper 31 would have been improved through input from others within the committee. Nevertheless, 32 we hope that their influence is evident, as we have learned much from them. Some of our 33 many affinities with them include:

- 34
- 35 • We hold to the Scriptures as our only authoritative guide to engaging in mission (cf.
36 A's & D's 1a, 1b and 3b).
 - 37 • We believe that both Scripture and our confession encourage believers to apply 38 scriptural principles to the realities of everyday life, wherever they live (cf. A's & 39 D's 13a, 13b, 14a and 14b).
 - 40 • We believe that Christ ordinarily intends that his people will follow him in the 41 context of their family, birth community, and vocation (cf. A's & D's 12b, 13a).

- 1 • In recognition of the comprehensive claims of Christ on the lives of his people, we 2 hold that identity in Christ is wholly controlling in the life of the believer; we do not 3 advocate or support voluntary, indefinite retention of Islamic religious identity by 4 Muslim background believers (MBBs³) (cf. A's & D's 11a and 11b).
- 5 • We hold that disciples of MBBs should not encourage a disciple to remain within 6 Islamic religious institutions⁴ (cf. A's & D's 12c).
- 7 • We hold that every believer is a member of the church of Jesus Christ, and we 8 believe in the central importance of every believer to be part of a local expression of 9 church (cf. A's & D's 5a, 5b, and 7b).
- 10 • We hold by faith that Muslims are people made in the image of God, and that through 11 Christ alone (cf. A's & D's 4c), people from Muslim majority countries will be 12 among those represented before the throne of God (Rev. 7:9-10).

13 14 Please Note:

- 15
16 1. This report totally replaces last year's Minority Report (MR 2013), which we take off the 17 table of discussion.⁵
- 18
19 2. The MR 2013 was the product of one author while "Realities on the Ground," March 19, 20 2014 is the consensus product of two authors.
- 21
22 3. We had hoped the Committee would have included this paper as an appendix to a unified 23 report presented to the 42nd General Assembly.

⁴ By "Islamic religious institutions," we have in mind places of corporate Islamic worship and prayer.

⁵ In the Minority Report submitted to the GA in 2013, the author attempted to describe simply, via a diagram known as PQRS and its variants, the diversity that exists within the Christian world and within the Muslim world. Further reflection led to the realization that not only was the attempt to describe multi-dimensional realities (culture, religion, beliefs, practices, issues of the heart, lifestyle, identity and the practice of ministry) impossible to accomplish through such a simple diagram, but that the attempt to do so was both confusing and at points subject to broad misunderstanding. With regret for both the confusion and misunderstanding to which use of the PQRS model may have contributed, the author withdraws it and its accompanying written descriptions in hopes that "Realities on the Ground" (March 19, 2014) will more clearly and effectively communicate his concerns and their grounding in the Scriptures.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE 42ND GENERAL ASSEMBLY

With the previous comments as background, we, the undersigned members of the Ad Interim Study Committee on Insider Movements, bring the following motion as a substitute to the motion of the committee to the 42nd General Assembly of the PCA:

1. That “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” serve as a Partial Report (Part Two of Two Parts).
2. That the 42nd General Assembly make available and recommend for study “A Call to Faithful Witness, Part Two: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” dated March 19, 2014, to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.
3. That the 42nd General Assembly make available and recommend for study “Realities on the Ground” dated March 19, 2014, to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.
4. That the 42nd General Assembly dismiss the Ad Interim Study Committee on Insider Movements with thanks.

We request that each of these recommendations receive separate consideration by the Assembly.

1 REALITIES ON THE GROUND:
2 THE 42ND GENERAL ASSEMBLY CONTEXT
3

4 As members of the Study Committee, we offer a few prefacing comments regarding this 5 paper's context. Both authors of the present paper signed Part One of the Committee's 6 Report on translation issues submitted to and received by the General Assembly of 2012.
7 One of us signed the Committee Report submitted to the 41st GA in June 2013, and the other 8 expressed substantive agreement with it, while submitting a report intended to be 9 complementary to it. No papers from the SCIM were acted upon by the 41st GA in 2013.

10
11 In presenting this paper, we are assuming that the commissioners to the 42nd General 12 Assembly understand that the Insider Movement (hereafter, IM) discussion is highly 13 nuanced; that is, there is a spectrum of practice advocated under the broad banner of IM.
14 The Affirmations and Denials, developed in the CR, are designed to aid by providing a 15 framework by which ministry can be assessed with regard to biblical faithfulness.

16
17 However, because certain ideas or methodologies find repetition in the writings of IM 18 proponents, the CR also posits the existence of what it terms the Insider Movement 19 Paradigm (IMP). Mention of the Insider Movement Paradigm, then, serves within the CR as 20 a collective reference to the following patterns encountered within IM writing and 21 methodology: advocating for retention of Muslim (socio-)religious identity, basing an 22 argument upon anecdotal or experiential evidence, implicitly granting authority for mission 23 strategy to anthropology and the social sciences, evidencing a weak ecclesiology, and 24 appealing to Acts 15 or other passages while utilizing a hermeneutic with insufficient 25 attention to redemptive-historical considerations.

26
27 Without questioning that the described elements are found in IM proponents' writings, we 28 must ask: what constitutes appropriate use of the Insider Movement Paradigm? How much 29 of the paradigm is actually uniquely descriptive of Insider Movement theory and practice?
30 Further, and importantly, should the Insider Movement Paradigm be used as a substitute for 31 careful application of the Affirmations and Denials? Is every instance of an element of the 32 Insider Movement Paradigm an indication of syncretistic error?

33
34 We bring up these questions because we are aware that some view this report as subject to 35 some of the same weaknesses in methodology as IMP proponents. For example, we feel 36 free to tell a story to illustrate a reality on the ground, which some view as basing an 37 argument upon anecdote. Such a criticism, we believe, evidences an overdependence on the 38 CR's IMP as a standard for IM-specific critique and thus risks another kind of error: creating 39 a caricature. Instead, we recommend careful application of the CR's Affirmations and 40 Denials as a more reliable set of tools for evaluating ministry and ministry philosophy.

1 Is There Biblical and Confessional Basis to Address “Realities on the Ground?”

2
3 The realities we raise usually describe or imply challenging realities faced by missionaries, 4 all of which may properly be seen as a result of sin in the world. Is there any doubt that 5 obedience to the Great Commission will result in our confronting many situations that have 6 their root in sinful reality? Some may protest that such realities can be expected among those 7 who do not believe, but that to raise such issues in relation to churches is in some way 8 prejudicial against local churches. At this point we find it helpful briefly to review how our 9 confession, as part and parcel of affirming a priority on biblical ecclesiology, both 10 acknowledges and encourages engagement with difficult realities on the ground—even those 11 occurring within the church.

12 13 The Westminster Standards appropriately represent the ekklesia, the people of God, in the 14 Old and New Testaments not only as the Wife (Hosea 2 and 3) and/or Bride (Eph. 5) but 15 also in the real world as “sometimes more, sometimes less visible” and as “more or less 16 pure” (WLC 23), and further saying that “the purest churches under heaven are subject both 17 to mixture and error, and some have degenerated as to become no churches of Christ, but 18 synagogues of Satan” (WLC 24). Certainly ancient Israel and Judah reflected that “more or 19 less pure” character, as well as the churches of the Apocalypse (Revelation 2 and 3), not to 20 speak of the problematic young churches established by the apostle Paul that reflected the 21 same characteristics. Yet the Lord still considered them “my people.”

22
23 When one reflects on the “mixed multitude” that came out of Egypt with Moses, it certainly 24 was true that many of them brought along with them a lot of “baggage” which exhibited the 25 messy realities that churches manifest all over the world in every context. Some of these 26 messy realities are exhibited in people who come to Christ from all tribes and nations, 27 especially from cultures who have never heard of Jesus Christ as he is presented and offered 28 in the Gospel. Without forgetting that Jesus taught us to take the log from our own eye, 29 sometimes with Moses we are angry and ready to break the tablets. With Jeremiah we weep 30 at the stiff-necked people, who are sheep without a shepherd. With Paul we deal gently and 31 tenderly with young believers as a nursing mother cherishes her children. And with Jesus, 32 the Lion of the tribe of Judah, we point out the shortcomings in the churches as well as 33 commend the faith and achievements accomplished through the grace of God.

34
35 Furthermore, there is a significant statement in the WCF 25.2 with which we need to reckon, 36 i.e.: “The visible church ... is the kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ, the house and family of 37 God, out of which there is no ordinary possibility of salvation” (emphasis added). This 38 important phrase will be explicated later using the comments of Scottish theologian John 39 Macpherson and A. A. Hodge in their respective commentaries on The Confession of Faith.

40

1 With the advent of anthropology and the social sciences, missiologists began to wrestle with 2 appropriate incorporation of truth from these disciplines, truth which can be seen as 3 “borrowed capital” from God’s truth, even though these disciplines often demonstrate an 4 unbiblical bias.⁶ It is indeed vital that we never adopt principles derived from the social 5 sciences in such a way as to elevate culture, rather than Scripture, as our primary frame of 6 reference. Nonetheless, over and over again Scripture urges the church toward practical 7 obedience within the fallen human context in which it is located. Such obedience is 8 demanded as a response of love, both to our God and for others made in his image.

9
10 With that in mind, we now turn to specific realities that MBBs face in their journey of faith.
11 We do this not as a substitute for biblically-founded methodology for mission, but rather as 12 an acknowledgment that the same Scriptures which ground our understanding of mission 13 will guide us in its practice in the face of whatever realities we encounter.⁷ Examining the 14 realities on the ground with a biblical framework is key for equipping PCA churches, 15 missionaries, and partners to engage in ministry in the Muslim world.

16 17 PART 1: REALITIES ON THE GROUND FACING MUSLIM 18 BACKGROUND BELIEVERS

19 20 Reality #1: It is Important that MBBs Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.

21
22 We propose two basic reasons why it is important for MBBs to live within Muslim societies.
23 The first is that God receives glory as his people obey him right where they are. Such 24 obedience will include gathering together with other believers and the formation of biblical 25 churches within Muslim societies. Such churches will come about according to God’s good 26 will as he hears his people pray the prayer of Paul for blessing beyond what we can think or 27 imagine in Eph. 3:16-21 (cf. Reality #5 below). The second answer is that it is important for 28 MBBs to live faithfully within Muslim societies for the sake of the advance of the gospel.⁸ It 29 is desirable, when possible, for new believers to remain relationally connected to their 30 Muslim family, friends, and colleagues so that more and more Muslims may be given first-31 hand, personal exposure to life and hope in Jesus. It is to this second answer that we now 32 turn our attention.

⁸ Faithful witness to Christ within Muslim society must be encouraged. The Atlas of Global Christianity (Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 2009), 6-7, compares numbers of adherents by religion globally in 1910 and 2010 as a percentage of total world population at the time. In 1910, Christians represented 34.8% and Muslims 12.6%. In 2010, Christians: 33.2%, Muslims: 22.4%

1 The Gospel Moving within Households

2
3 Pre-existing families and social groupings have the potential of birthing fellowships of 4 believers as they become followers of Christ through exposure to the gospel (cf. A & D 5 13a). This is why Paul argues strongly in 1 Corinthians 7:12-16 that it is important for a 6 believing spouse to remain in his or her family, so that they may come to Christ and as 7 numbers increase, sprout into a new church (see the exegesis of 1 Cor. 7 that follows in 8 Part 2). This pre-existing community has the potential to become the beginning of a church 9 plant, and in light of Gen. 12:3 (ESV), where Abram is told, "...in you all the families of the 10 earth shall be blessed," we have biblical confidence that God's promise extends to the level 11 of families and clans.

12 13 This happened in the household of Cornelius in Acts 10 and in the households of Lydia and 14 the jailor in Acts 16. This is happening in Muslim settings when the oikos or the "household" 15 is wide enough to include neighbors and friends and not only the nuclear family. Of course 16 there are other instances in which people came to faith through gospel proclamation that 17 occurred outside the family context (see Acts 4:4; 8:26, 35; 13:12; 17:34).

18 19 Unintended Alienation

20
21 As will be illustrated shortly in the story of an MBB named Mustafa (under Reality #3), 22 alienation between believers and unbelievers may have other causes than the believers' pure 23 devotion to Christ; other historical and cultural factors may be at play. Thus, Peter teaches 24 believers in persecuted contexts to live respectably within society and strongly warns them 25 against behavior that will lead them into suffering and alienation caused by the wrong 26 reasons (see 1 Peter 2:13-14, 20 and 3:17). Unfortunately, believers in Muslim-majority 27 contexts can be persecuted by family or others in Muslim societies for perceived identification 28 with a community (and history) that is immoral. For many Muslims, "Christian" and 29 "Western" can be virtual synonyms, with all that is unbiblical and immoral in the West 30 being attributed to Christians, including those in a local, traditional church community.
31 Thus, if an MBB seeks to rid himself completely of his former culture and identify publicly 32 with the "Christian" community, in practical terms others may view him as identifying with 33 an immoral culture and thus distracting his family and friends from seeing Christ in him. For 34 this reason, Denial 10b of the CR states, "We deny that 'Christian' is a mandatory label for 35 followers of Christ in all times and places, since contexts exist where the term has been 36 corrupted by associations foreign to its biblical and historic usage."

37
38 In light of that reality, it should be easy to see why MBBs are often put in a very difficult 39 position. If they seek to associate themselves with "Christian" culture—which to many 40 Muslims does not fundamentally mean those who follow Jesus, but rather those who live

1 immoral lives, killed many Muslims in the Crusades, and so on—they could lose the very 2 relationships that the gospel is designed to transform.

3 4 On the other hand, maintaining those relationships within Muslim societies will result in 5 pressure to conform to societal norms, as we will see in Reality 4. However, living out one’s 6 identity in Christ leads to transformation in every area of one's life and produces the aroma 7 of Christ to some who are around him. This is the very kind of situation that Peter was 8 addressing in 1 Peter 3:13-16:

9
10 Who is going to harm you if you are eager to do good? But even if you should 11 suffer for what is right, you are blessed. Do not fear what they fear; do not be 12 frightened. But in your hearts set apart Christ as Lord. Always be prepared to 13 give an answer to everyone who asks you to give the reason for the hope that 14 you have. But do this with gentleness and respect, keeping a clear conscience, 15 so that those who speak maliciously against your good behavior in Christ may 16 be ashamed of their slander.

17
18 As outsiders, who simply don’t live within these same complex realities in our home 19 cultures, we need to demonstrate humility and patience, recognizing that MBBs are truly in 20 a difficult position as they navigate the waters of integrating their identity in Christ and their 21 desire to see family members come to Christ.

22
23 Reality #2: MBBs Can Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.

24
25 As we reflect on MBBs remaining relationally connected within Muslim societies, it’s 26 helpful to be aware of social and relational dynamics that exist within many such contexts.

27
28 Not all Muslims are the same. Many Muslims could attend mosque but don’t. These are 29 considered low-practice Muslims.⁹ But are these not also Muslims? In fact, many of them 30 consider themselves as “the real Muslims,” and they see the rest as fanatics who are ruining 31 the reputation of Islam.

32
33 Muslims in Egypt, for instance, are going through an identity crisis concerning who is a true 34 Muslim. Members of the Muslim Brotherhood have their answer to who is a true Muslim, 35 while those who revolted against them have a completely different answer. Those disagreeing 36 with the Muslim Brotherhood are advocating a form of separation between religion and 37 state.

38

⁹ Low-practice Muslims do not go to the local mosques on Fridays and do not do the daily prayers, yet they might fast a number of days during the month of Ramadan to make up for their lack of religiosity.

1 Additionally, in most of the Muslim-majority countries in the world, legal identities are 2 permanently established at birth: in some countries virtually all are declared to be Muslim; 3 in others with recognized Christian minority populations, those born to Christian parents are 4 declared as Christian. Each child inherits his religious identity from his parents, and legally, 5 it is impossible to change one's religious affiliation, which is stamped on ID cards.
6 Accordingly, even if a Muslim comes to believe in Jesus, in the eyes of the law, he is still a 7 Muslim, regardless of his beliefs. While obviously we wish that there was more religious 8 freedom in these countries, these are the current realities on the ground that we must 9 recognize. This legal reality makes it clear that not every person who identifies himself as a 10 Muslim does so because of his or her religious or personal beliefs. Thus for now, we must 11 recognize this and walk patiently and carefully with our brothers and sisters who must learn 12 to follow Jesus in places that force them to remain officially recognized as "Muslims" 13 because government regulations don't allow them to change their legal identity.

14

15 Thus, the Muslim world is not only about formal religion but is a broad social/political/16 religious community. It is inclusive of all Muslims in spite of the great diversity among the 17 various Muslim people groups and sects, including Muslims who consider themselves to be 18 atheists!

19

20 At the same time, Muslim communities, even if they are secular, tend to exclude former 21 Muslims who have abandoned their community and joined another religion or religious 22 community. Their history as Muslims includes the Crusades, colonialism, and the history of 23 Israel since 1948. This history has strongly contributed to their sense of identity, their sense 24 of what it means to be Muslim and what it means to be Christian. Moving out from the 25 Muslim community to another religion that has associations with the Crusades, colonialism, 26 or Christian Zionism is often socially understood as high treason.

27

28 These social and legal dynamics highlight the difficulties faced by those MBBs called to 29 remain physically present within Muslim societies as they faithfully follow Christ, which in 30 turn raises the issue of how such believers will identify themselves within the broader 31 Muslim society.

32

33 Here we turn to the helpful Affirmations and Denials of the CR. Two of the affirmations and 34 a denial read as follows:

35

36 12a) We affirm that true conversion to Jesus Christ involves a radical change 37 of mind and heart, though discipleship is a Spirit-wrought process of growing 38 in grace and truth.

39

40 12b) We affirm that Christ ordinarily calls each believer to serve him in the 41 context of family, birth community, and vocation.

1 12c) We deny that individuals may disregard Scripture’s teaching about idolatry 2 of heart and practice, may misrepresent or compromise their new allegiance to 3 Christ, or in any other way may dissimulate or disobey biblical teaching, in 4 order to remain in their social context.

5
6 These particular Affirmations and Denials are rooted in the section of the committee report 7 on the Covenant Identity Paradigm (CIP).¹⁰ We mention them because herein we give 8 frequent attention to the principle in Affirmation 12b which states that Christ ordinarily calls 9 believers to serve him in the context of their family, their birth community and their 10 vocation (1 Cor. 7:20). And they are to do it (as balanced by 12a and 12c) in a way that 11 displays, without compromise, the magnitude of what God has brought about in and for 12 them in Christ.

13
14 We share concern with the CR that a believer’s identity be purely and wholly fixed in 15 Christ; that believers not identify both with Christ and false religion. Again, the 16 Affirmations and Denials provide helpful guidance:

17
18 11a) We affirm that a new believer’s grasp of his new unique and covenantal 19 identity in Christ and of the implications of his new allegiance to Christ is an 20 ongoing process of growth and maturity; and that the articulation of this 21 identity is subject to refinement in keeping with Scripture even across 22 generations of believers.

23
24 11b) We deny that a believer prior to Christ’s return ever reaches a terminal 25 point where his sense of identity and his understanding of his allegiance to 26 Christ is no longer subject to this process of refinement.

27
28 In brief, we understand that this Affirmation and Denial pairing (along with 12a-c above) 29 biblically prioritizes a believer’s identity in Christ throughout life—far above all other 30 allegiances—while acknowledging that a believer takes time to grow in his or her 31 apprehension of who Christ is, what Christ has accomplished, and what his identity in Christ 32 means. The missionary discipler’s role (whether national or foreign) is therefore to point 33 believers toward onward growth in their disciples’ Christ-focused identity, not to promote 34 the indefinite retention of a false religious or “socio-religious” identity.

35
36 Therefore, we now prefer to re-orient the identity discussion as raised by IM proponents to 37 what is clear from the Bible: that believers focus all of life, and therefore their identity, in 38 Christ, right where they are.¹¹ We suggest another Affirmation and Denial pairing to express 39 this:

¹⁰ See the 2014 Committee Report, Attachment 1 (the revised 2013 Committee Report), Part 2, Section 5.

¹¹ Cf. our treatment of Consideration C, further below.

1 We affirm upholding the pre-eminence of Christ in the life of all believers 2 wherever they are.

3
 4 We deny that witness to Christ increases through the retention of any identity 5 that is not Christ-focused.

6 7 We thus acknowledge the social reality of diverse self-identification among Muslims with 8 regard to Islamic belief and practice (i.e., there exist the religiously devout, atheists, and a 9 spectrum in between). Nevertheless, however elastic the concept of Muslim identity may be, 10 MBBs should be encouraged toward ever-growing faithfulness to Christ and identification 11 with him while remaining within Muslim society. Unfortunately, this encouragement to 12 remain within Muslim society does not always happen and is the subject of our next reality.

13 14 Reality #3: National Churches within Muslim Societies Do Not Always Accept MBBs.

15
 16 While some Christian-background churches welcome MBBs into fellowship without 17 requiring them to conform to extra-biblical cultural requirements, this sadly is not always 18 the case in many Muslim-majority countries. Our intent is not to criticize national Christians 19 or churches but to describe a reality some MBBs face. In some places, Muslims and 20 Christians live in a state of long-term, proximate distrust between their communities, which 21 can make it difficult for believers from these different backgrounds to enjoy fellowship 22 together. It may help the reader to understand this situation by considering how similar 23 dynamics are at work among Christians of differing races or ethnicities or cultural 24 backgrounds within the USA, and how this can lead to unfortunate realities in the church.
 25 Christ has indeed broken down barriers to fellowship (Eph. 2:14), but we, his people, often 26 have difficulty living in the fullness of what he has accomplished.

27
 28 Here we will illustrate this reality in the form of a fictional situation in which we portray a 29 composite of real people. Imagine one character in the story, an Egyptian Christian young 30 man and a true believer, living in Cairo, Egypt. Every Thursday evening, he goes to a 31 Presbyterian church in downtown Cairo to attend the meeting for young adults. Because he 32 was discriminated against by Muslims during his university days, he has a certain prejudice 33 against Muslims. In Egyptian mass media, there are often articles written by Muslims 34 attacking Christianity and the Bible. Furthermore, the Muslim equivalent of TV evangelists 35 keep insulting Christianity.

36
 37 The other character in this story has the name Mustafa. He is a composite of many MBBs 38 whom we have known intimately from various parts of the Muslim world. This parable will 39 illustrate the on-the-ground realities of what happens when people are converted from the 40 Muslim world to the "Christian" world.

41

1 Life is easy when considered in the abstract, but we live in a broken world. Here is how our 2 young Egyptian believer describes the scene:¹²

3
4 On a certain Thursday, I go to our weekly meeting at church. My friends tell
5 me that we have a guest speaker tonight, a Muslim who has become a 6 Christian. My response to the news is a mixture of pleasure and suspicion. Is 7 he a genuine Christian, or is he playing a role in order to deceive us? When he 8 enters the church, he automatically repulses me as I notice that he has a callus 9 on his forehead, a hypocritical manifestation of a fake spirituality. Fanatical 10 Muslims with the zibeeba (a callus on the forehead) attempt to communicate 11 the message that they have prayed so many times, kneeling and touching the 12 carpet with their foreheads, that they got that callus. Another thing that 13 repulses me is the way he greets me. He says, “Assalamu alaykum” (peace to 14 you). Only Muslims use that terminology when they greet one another.
15 Perhaps he is not a true Christian. Something that repulses me even more is 16 his name. How could he come to our church with the Muslim name Mustafa?
17 Mustafa means “the chosen one” and is one of the names of their prophet 18 Muhammad because they believe that he was chosen by God. I wonder what 19 kind of meeting we will be having tonight.

20
21 After the singing and the prayers, this man is introduced as a former Muslim 22 who has become a Christian. I sit there wondering whether my friends who 23 invited him were duped and trusted him prematurely. I need him to convince 24 me that he has become a “real and true Christian,” just like me, and I am not 25 an easy person to convince.

26
27 When he starts sharing his story, I, like most of those in the church meeting, 28 quietly listen to him to find out whether he is genuine. As he warms up and 29 starts attacking Islam and ridiculing Muhammad and the Muslim faith, I start 30 enjoying his story. From our laughter at his jokes about Islam and our 31 agreeing with him about his attacks, he finds out how to win our approval. By 32 the time he finishes, we are all elated and encouraged by his sharing, although 33 we wish he were more polished like us and used our Christian terminology.
34 But we know we need to be patient because this polish will come with time 35 and practice. After the meeting, I, along with others, thank him for his sharing 36 and congratulate him on his conversion. As people come and thank him, he 37 feels as though he has finally found his place of belongingness in our church 38 meeting because he is being treated like a hero with a halo around his head.

¹² The following is taken from Nabeel Jabbour, The Crescent Through the Eyes of the Cross (Colorado Springs: NavPress, 2008), 230–232.

1 I still do not like the zibeeba, the callus on his forehead. I hope that in the 2 future he will put cream on it in order to cover it up. During the informal time
 3 at the end of the meeting, I follow him with the corner of my eye and notice at 4 one point that he is talking to my younger sister and to other women. When I 5 see him doing that, I begin to wonder about his motives. Is he coming after the 6 women? Why would a Muslim want to believe in Christ other than for 7 women, money, or a desire to go to America? So back at home, I warn my 8 sister and advise her not to get too excited just yet that he has become a true 9 believer. We will need to wait and see “fruit” before we trust him. I even 10 quote to her a litmus test: “By their fruit you recognize them” (Matthew 7:20).

11
 12 When Mustafa returns the following Thursday to our church meeting, not as 13 the speaker but as an ordinary person, he finds that most of us respond to him 14 with plastic, artificial smiles. We keep him away at a safe distance because he 15 still greets us by saying “Assalamu alaykum,” and he still “smells” like a 16 Muslim. It seems I was not the only one from our church who preached to a 17 family member a little sermon about the need to avoid Mustafa until we see 18 fruit! So Mustafa starts wondering whether he has come to the right church.
 19 Very soon he meets another Protestant Christian in Cairo, who invites him to 20 his church. The halo returns temporarily but does not last long. Then he gets 21 invited to another church and another, and in the meantime he learns how to 22 please the Christians: by making fun of Islam and by attacking Muhammad 23 and the Qur’an.

24
 25 As the months pass, he begins to get more polished in his terminology. At the 26 same time, he ruptures every relationship he had with his Muslim family and 27 friends as he becomes openly critical of Islam. He even changes his name 28 from Mustafa to Peter when baptized.

29
 30 Shortly afterward, he comes to our Thursday meeting again, this time to give a 31 testimony of how he is suffering for Christ. He is not Mustafa anymore, but 32 brother Peter. I never felt at ease by calling him “brother Mustafa.” Brother 33 and Mustafa did not mesh. He no longer uses the Muslim terminology he used 34 to, and he lifts up his arms in church during the singing and shouts, 35 “Hallelujah” and “Praise the Lord.” Now he has really become one of us; he is 36 inside our “fortress with thick walls” that protects us from the Muslims outside.

37
 38 This composite sadly describes how some national Christians in Muslim countries, (in this 39 case, in the Middle East), have treated MBBs over the centuries. It is possible that the 40 wholesale rejection of his former culture encouraged by national or foreign Christians, rather 41 than preserving him from syncretism, will fail in training him to think critically about how

1 his new faith in Jesus affects each area of his life. Further, such wholesale rejection, as 2 opposed to careful reflection guided by study of Scripture, may unnecessarily rupture his 3 relationships with family and friends. And it may also make it difficult to develop deep 4 relationships with other believers who have chosen to live out their faith within Muslim 5 society.

6 7 Reality #4: Living within Muslim Societies Requires MBBs to be Vigilant to Avoid 8 Syncretism.
9

10 Upon being born again, not every MBB believes God is leading him to transition from the 11 Muslim world (community) to the culturally “Christian” world (community). Those MBBs 12 who believe they are called by God to remain within the Muslim world, relationally 13 connected to family and friends, face special God-given challenges in avoiding syncretism 14 while remaining faithful to Christ. Like every believer on earth, they journey increasingly 15 toward Christ and away from sin and syncretism as they go through the process of 16 sanctification.

17
18 In the West, we routinely help new believers transition from wrong theology to biblical 19 theology. We patiently extend grace to young Christians who have a hard time working 20 through issues arising from associations with ungodly families, who struggle with figuring 21 out how to identify with Christ in hostile contexts, or who have trouble making sense of the 22 Trinity, or the union of Christ’s two natures. We extend grace to young believers who are 23 having difficulty reconciling things they were taught in a secular/humanist education with 24 the teaching of Scripture.

25
26 We need to extend similar grace to MBBs who have surrendered their lives to Christ and are 27 now struggling with growing pains. Although they are a new creation in Christ with a new 28 preeminent second-birth identity in Christ (2 Cor. 5:17), these new believers are often 29 relationally well-connected to their own people, among whom they used to be immersed in 30 wrong theology. Mentors who come alongside new believers to facilitate their move away 31 from wrong theology to biblical theology should primarily help them build a solid 32 foundation on the Word of God, and warn them against the real potential of syncretism.
33 They need help to develop a thoroughly biblical worldview and lifestyle. As with most of us, 34 this process normally takes time.

35 36 Key Questions
37

38 MBBs in Christ who remain connected to family and friends will struggle with important 39 questions regarding how to avoid syncretism and remain faithful to Christ. Some of these 40 include:
41

- 1 • Should he fast during Ramadan with his extended family? Should he feast with them
- 2 in the family gatherings after the fast? How can he do so without being deceptive?
- 3 • Is it possible for him to express respect for Muhammad as a civil leader who affected
- 4 world history, without dishonoring Christ?
- 5 • Should he use the Qur'an as a bridge to discussion with his family about the Christ of
- 6 the Bible? If so, how does he do that appropriately?
- 7 • How can he develop healthy relationships and mutual accountability with others in
- 8 the Body of Christ?

9

10 An Important Guideline

11

12 An important guideline is that while discipling should be carried out in the birth communities,

13 disciples should not be encouraged to remain inside the Islamic religious institutions. While 14 some IM advocates suggest disciples can remain within Islamic religious institutions such as 15 mosques, we believe that there is too much danger of syncretism with Islamic religion in 16 such an approach. The CR rightly states: "Islamic religious beliefs and practices cannot be 17 treated with neutrality."¹³ Some MBBs and some Christian missionaries feel free to stand

18 behind the imam in the mosque and to synchronize with the forms of Muslim prayer while 19 praying over texts from the Scriptures. Standing behind the imam while he is praying

20 implies endorsing his prayer. Such a practice shows communal solidarity in Islamic religious 21 belief and practice, which a follower of Christ should not do. Encouragement to do this from 22 a Western missionary often comes from the Westerner's individualistic approach to faith.

23

24 However, transition from Islamic religious institutions in some cases is a process that could 25 take time. Though regeneration takes place in an instant, sometimes from a human perspective, 26 it can appear that the process of a Muslim coming to faith in Christ takes a long time.

27 Evaluating when a Muslim comes to faith in Christ can therefore be difficult. Assisting him

28 through spiritual growth as it pertains to avoiding syncretism with Islam can be just as 29 difficult, and requires biblical, spiritual discernment.

30

31 Full surrender to Christ will eventually lead MBBs to renounce false Islamic belief held by 32 their family and friends. How can an MBB be fully committed to Christ and at the same

33 time believe that Muhammad is superior to Christ and that the Qur'an is superior to the 34 Bible? This would be schizophrenia. MBBs who have come to know Christ must change

35 theologically in order to adhere to biblical theology, in order faithfully to live and bear

36 testimony within the Muslim world. While it is best if they can continue to be socially and

37 relationally connected to Muslim relatives and friends, they must theologically shift away

38 from their former identity in Adam (whether that was traditionally Islamic or modern and 39 secular) to their new identity in Christ.

¹³ 2014 Committee Report Section A.1.2, "Identity."

1 Regardless of what they do, some MBBs are rejected by their families and declared as 2 infidels. Some are killed; others must flee for their lives to other countries.¹⁴ Faithful and 3 effective witness by word and deed on the part of MBBs is a process that may take years in 4 order to bear fruit, but by God’s grace many will hear, believe, and persevere.

6 The Question of “Allah”

7 8 One question that comes up among Westerners as they think about the progress of the gospel 9 in Muslim areas is that of the Arabic word for elohim and theos (in English, “God”). The 10 following points address the issue from the perspective of Arabic-speaking contexts. Perhaps 11 in other countries, where Arabic is not the spoken language, and other words for God exist 12 in the native language, other points would need to be made. However, the following points, 13 taken together, will hopefully provide some clarity on both the linguistic question (can the 14 word “Allah” be used?) and the identity question (do Muslims and Christians worship the 15 same God?)

- 16
17 (1) Muslims and Christians do not worship the same God, because Muslims who accept the 18 Qur’an’s interpretation of Jesus do not believe in Jesus as their Savior.
- 19
20 (2) While similarities exist between our description of God, great dissimilarities exist as 21 well (obviously including the preeminent difference that biblically, God reveals himself 22 as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit), such that we cannot posit on the basis of theological 23 descriptions of God that we worship the same God.
- 24
25 (3) Because the Qur’an drew from oral narratives during the time of Muhammad, some of 26 them deriving from the Old Testament and the New Testament, there are some shared 27 historical narratives about God.
- 28
29 (4) Because there are shared (though not identical) historical narratives (for example, the 30 story of God commanding Abraham to sacrifice his son in Genesis 22 and Surah 37), 31 when speaking with Muslims, there are times when we will both be pointing to the same 32 historical referent, that is, the God who revealed himself to Noah, Abraham, Moses, and 33 so on.
- 34
35 (5) Despite that shared referent, Muslims are not worshipping the God about whom they 36 know some true stories. Only Jesus makes that possible (John 14:6).
- 37

¹⁴ See the story of an Egyptian MBB, Mark Gabriel (pen name) in Section I, “My Story,” in Mark A. Gabriel, Ph. D. Islam and Terrorism (Lake Mary: Front Line, 2002). Mark Gabriel is a former professor of Islamic history at Al-Azhar University, Cairo, Egypt.

1 (6) Arab Christians, even before the time of Muhammad, used the word “Allah” to refer to 2 the God of the Bible.

3
4 (7) At least in Arabic-speaking contexts, there is no other word to use for God.¹⁵

5
6 (8) Using the word Allah is therefore not only acceptable for believers in Jesus in Arabic-7 speaking contexts, but it is the established practice of Arab Christians, and other Christians 8 must respect this. As in all contexts, this means that believers in the Arab world must 9 carefully and powerfully explain who God truly is as he has revealed himself in his Son.

10 11 Reality #5: Growing in Christ within Muslim Societies Holds Significant Challenges
12 for MBBs.

13
14 Reality #4 acknowledged that MBBs face difficulties related to avoiding syncretism while 15 living within Muslim societies. Reality #5 turns our attention to difficulties MBBs face 16 while seeking to grow in Christ while living within those societies.

17
18 As with all of us, MBBs in Christ must determine how to live holy lives in a frequently unholy 19 context. They need wisdom and discernment regarding living out their faith. Young MBBs 20 still living at home, for example, must honor their father and mother. In doing this, they 21 may seek, through their transformed lives, to take seriously the teaching of Jesus to let their 22 light shine before men, “that they might see your good works and give glory to your Father 23 who is in heaven.” But the time will come when they must speak, for Jesus also says, 24 “...everyone who acknowledges me before men, I also will acknowledge before my Father 25 who is in heaven, but whoever denies me before men, I also will deny before my Father who 26 is in heaven” (Matt. 10:32-33). Faith and wisdom are key, and can also require courage, 27 patience, and prudence. Sometimes, first earning the right to speak by demonstrating a 28 transformed life is critical. Yet fear keeps some from identifying with Christ in front of 29 others; this is sin from which the kindness of God leads his people to turn (Rom. 2:4). His 30 love will cast out fear (1 John 4:18). Obviously, the challenge is to stay focused on the love 31 of God in Christ.

32
33 We have already mentioned in Reality #3 that national churches within Muslim societies are 34 not always welcoming to MBBs. It is also true that not all MBBs within Muslim-majority 35 countries want to become part of a minority church community. It could be that although 36 they want to identify with Christ, they do not want to identify themselves with Western 37 “Christianity” which the local Muslim mindset may have identified as endorsing the immorality 38 evident in Hollywood movies, acceptance of homosexuality, and Christian Zionism. Starting 39 a new church is not necessarily a rejection of existing churches in a city; new church plants 40 may be motivated simply from a desire to reach an unreached part of a community.

¹⁵ Similar to English, there are other words like ar-rab (the Lord), but there is no other word that accurately translates the Greek theos and Hebrew elohim.

1 We do not here accept the false understanding of Christianity which many Muslims believe 2 and propagate. We are simply acknowledging that MBBs who live within Muslim society 3 face complex and difficult realities when they contemplate associating with a nearby church.
4 A decision not to associate with a known local church may be motivated by the desire to 5 show gospel love toward family and friends and willingness to walk that difficult path rather 6 than being motivated by fear of others' reactions. Further, we have already mentioned that 7 not all national churches within Muslim societies welcome MBBs. And sometimes 8 Christians—or other MBBs!—have very high expectations of a new MBB in proving that 9 his faith is genuine. These dynamics can all serve to demotivate a new MBB from joining an 10 existing church.

11
12 A further clarification is necessary. We acknowledge that biblically faithful Christian churches 13 within Muslim-majority settings (often as part of Christian minority populations) also face 14 difficult realities. They too are our brothers and sisters in Christ, and in obedience to what 15 the Scriptures teach we need also to honor them and partner with them in common 16 obedience to the Great Commission as they and we are able. All believers live in mutual 17 obligation to one another. WCF 26.1 states it well:

18
19 All saints, that are united to Jesus Christ their Head, by his Spirit, and by faith, 20 have fellowship with him in his graces, sufferings, death, resurrection, and 21 glory: and, being united to one another in love, they have communion in each 22 other's gifts and graces, and are obliged to the performance of such duties, 23 public and private, as do conduce to their mutual good, both in the inward and 24 outward man.

25
26 Thus an important question remains: How will MBBs relate with one another and other 27 believers as members of the body of Christ? To these questions we now turn.

28 29 Muslim Background Believer Ecclesial Expression

30
31 The letters of the New Testament make it very clear that God deeply loves churches that are 32 incomplete and have a lot of growing to do. Paul addressed the churches in Corinth and 33 Colossae with very high regard, even though they were struggling churches. Even so, Paul 34 invested in and encouraged them.

35
36 It is worth quoting from the WCF 25.2: “The visible church . . . is the kingdom of the Lord 37 Jesus Christ, the house and family of God, out of which there is no ordinary possibility of 38 salvation” (emphasis added). In his commentary on The Confession of Faith, Scottish 39 theologian John Macpherson comments as follows:

40 41 When we say that out of the visible church there is no ordinary possibility of 42 salvation, we guard against the error of supposing that connection with the 43 church as an institution necessarily secures salvation, and equally against the 1 notion that God regards the use of His own appointed means of grace as of 2 slight importance. By sovereign power He can work savingly apart from those 3 means, but ordinarily He does not. Cyprian said, ‘He who has not the church 4 as its mother has not God as its Father.’ When the church is viewed primarily 5 as an institution, such a maxim leads to an ecclesiasticism at once formal and 6 *exclusive.*¹⁶

7 Indeed, in his commentary on the Confession, A.A. Hodge says that this section similarly 8 teaches:

9
10 (3) The truth also that since the church is rendered visible by the profession 11 and outward obedience of its members; and since no class of men are ever 12 endowed with the power of discriminating with absolute accuracy the 13 genuineness of Christian characteristics, it necessarily follows that a credible 14 profession, as presumptive evidence of real religion, constitutes a person a 15 member of the visible church. By a credible profession is meant a profession 16 of the true religion sufficiently intelligent and sufficiently corroborated by the 17 daily life of the professor to be credited as genuine. Every such profession is 18 ground for the presumption that the person is a member of the true church, 19 and consequently constitutes him a member of the visible church, and lays an 20 obligation upon all other Christians to regard and treat him accordingly.¹⁷

21
22 One has to recognize that these statements by stalwart Presbyterians are clearly illustrated by 23 Jesus’ statement that “the men of Nineveh shall stand up with this generation at the judgment, 24 and shall condemn it because they repented at the preaching of Jonah” (Matthew 12:41). The 25 same holds for the Queen of Sheba in Matt. 12:42. And can anyone deny that the thief on the 26 cross was a member of the church? In all of these examples, faith (like that of many MBBs 27 today) was coupled with repentance and they were not denied entry into the church, the 28 kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ.

29 30 In summary, MBBs with a credible profession of faith who live within Muslim societies ought 31 to be viewed as members of the visible church of Jesus Christ, and treated accordingly.
32 Eminent Presbyterians have argued that such believers should be considered members of the 33 visible church. Our point here is not to assert that MBBs who remain within Muslim 34 society, even as they gather, always evidence the full marks we in the PCA associate with a 35 local expression of the visible church. Rather, we emphasize that we should embrace and ¹⁶ Rev. John Macpherson, The Confession of Faith, 11th edition (Boston: T&T Clark, 1881, 1951), 143. Note: the expression “ecclesiasticism at once formal and exclusive” is a reference to the Roman Catholic definition that no one outside the visible Roman Catholic Church may ever be saved. Hence, the caution for us is not to consider membership in an organized church, having received the sacraments, etc. as a badge of membership in the visible church. Emphasis added.

¹⁷ A. A. Hodge, The Confession of Faith (London: Banner of Truth Trust 1961), 313. Emphasis added.

1 esteem them as brothers with whom we desire to engage in mutual encouragement toward 2 maturity in Christ (Prov. 27:17). Such encouragement should also motivate MBBs to gather 3 in worship with other believers and together grow toward full biblical expression of the 4 marks of the church, a church which itself acts as salt and light to the Muslim society in 5 which it is located. Such a church should still understand that it is connected to churches that 6 worship God through Christ around the world.

7 8 If a PCA missionary or mission team goes to a Muslim country to plant a church, their goal 9 is clear: plant a church that exhibits the marks of the true church. The Lord Jesus Christ gave 10 an unmistakable mark when he said: "A new commandment I give you: love one another. As 11 I have loved you, so you must love one another. By this all men will know that you are my 12 disciples, if you love one another" (John 13:34-35). WCF 25.4 states: "This catholic church 13 has been sometimes more, sometimes less visible. And particular churches, which are members 14 thereof, are more or less pure, according as the doctrine of the gospel is taught and 15 embraced, ordinances administered, and public worship performed more or less purely in 16 them."

17 Similarly, according to Belgic Confession (Article 29) the marks of the true church are: 1) 18 the true preaching of the Word,¹⁸ 2) proper administration of sacraments (Baptism and the 19 Lord's Supper) and 3) faithful exercise of church discipline.¹⁹ Further, the CR notes: "True 20 churches are marked by biblical preaching, right administration of the sacraments, and 21 proper administration of discipline. These functions assume a duly constituted church 22 government, organized appropriately according to the size and circumstances of the local 23 church."²⁰

24
25 In terms of fleshing out what this means practically, what will applying the marks of the true 26 church to a young church plant in a Muslim setting look like? What are the spelled-out 27 essentials for a healthy beginning of a church plant in a Muslim setting to which MBBs 28 should aspire? Again, the ultimate aim is for groups to become full expressions of the local 29 church. We rejoice at the existence of such groups of MBBs meeting within Muslim 30 societies. Though they may begin humbly, each group is changing history.

- 31
32 1. A minimum of two or three people meeting together on a regular basis (Matt. 18:20).²¹ 33 At first, this may be an informal group loosely organized which later becomes more 34 formally organized (Heb. 10:25).

¹⁸ According to Reformed theology, if there is true preaching of the Word, then it should result in commitment to Christ, depth in the Scriptures, obedience, prayer, fellowship, and reaching out to the lost.

²⁰ 2014 Committee Report, Attachment A (Revised 2013 Committee Report), Executive Summary.

²¹ Meeting in the same place is not an essential mark of a church. Moving around from one apartment to another for their regular meetings could protect them from being detected by the secret police.

- 1 2. As numbers grow and gifting becomes evident, leadership by elders who hold 2 themselves and others accountable to right belief and living and a broader governance 3 structure come into the picture.
4
- 5 3. People who are in Christ, and have surrendered their lives to Christ as their Lord, who 6 desire to obey the Holy Spirit and worship the Father (Matt. 6:33).
7
- 8 4. People who accept the Word of God as the authority that shapes their lives, who preach 9 it, teach it, study it, memorize it, and above all obey it (2 Tim. 3:16; Josh. 1:8).
10
- 11 5. People who truly fellowship with one another and love one another by helping and 12 supporting one another (Jn. 13:34-35; Heb. 13:16).
13
- 14 6. People who reach out to the lost (Matt. 5:16; 6:44-48).
15
- 16 7. People are baptized into the fellowship of believers.
17
- 18 8. Believers remember Jesus' death and resurrection and practice the Lord's Supper on a 19 regular basis.
20

21 These are high standards. They describe the ideal foundation for planting churches in Muslim 22 context. Actually, many churches in the West fall short of manifesting some of these marks 23 of a church. Yet the young church should focus on and aspire to these goals in order to lay a 24 healthy foundation.
25

26 Leadership and discipline will be exercised when the numbers of believers increase and as 27 biblically faithful elders emerge. Deacons will give servant leadership and the Lord's Supper 28 will be practiced when brothers and sisters meet and experience together the presence of 29 Christ as they remember his sacrificial death (1 Cor. 11:27-29). Believers should be 30 baptized, but at the right time and for the right reasons.²² 31

32 As we continue to consider how ecclesial expression among MBBs may happen as they live 33 out their faith within the Muslim world, the following comment from the CR is helpful: 34

35 Christ-followers around the world should understand and describe themselves 36 first and foremost as followers of Jesus Christ, and therefore members of the 37 Visible Church, the body of Christ. Even "hidden Christians" in persecuted 38 circumstances are still part of the Visible Church as defined in the Westminster 39 Standards.²³

²² Mustafa (from the previous story) was baptized in order to convince prejudiced Christians that he was really one of them. That is not a biblical reason for baptism.

²³ CR 2014, Attachment A (Revised 2013 Committee Report), Executive Summary.

1 Recognizing that even “hidden Christians” under persecution are part of the visible church is 2 important. Given how different that is to the PCA’s North American context, it is important 3 to consider practically how the church may be manifested in other parts of the world. We 4 often find at least three different nascent manifestations of the visible church in places such 5 as Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, and Turkey. We consider the second and third as possible 6 expressions of how legitimate, “hidden Christians” meet with the intent of becoming fully 7 biblical expressions of the church of Christ. We make these informal distinctions in order to 8 describe the reality on the ground while affirming that true believers, including those who 9 meet in circumstances far different from our own, should be considered part of the church of 10 Jesus Christ.

- 11
- 12 1) Most familiar to Westerners is the established or obvious (legally established) church; its 13 Christian identity is obvious to the society in which it exists. At times the members of 14 the obvious church are expatriates or belong to a different ethnicity.
15
 - 16 2) A hidden or underground church can come about as the gospel spreads in a household 17 (oikos),²⁴ as a result, it is sometimes known as a house church. The hidden church is not 18 publically identified as a church in the place in which it exists. In the first century, the 19 gospel moved from one oikos to another through relationships that were impacted by 20 transformed lives. This movement of the gospel in the first century was effective in part 21 because the oikos was the central social structure of the day. Many parts of the Muslim 22 world have similar social structures today and are open to similar influences.
23
 - 24 3) In the semi-hidden church, foreign missionaries and/or national Christians who are 25 known publicly as Christians have discreet relationships with other believers from 26 Muslim back-ground who do not openly identify with the obvious church. This semi-27 hidden church has the potential of either going underground or becoming an established 28 or obvious church.
29

30 Members of hidden churches in hostile, dangerous contexts or destitute regions²⁵ often 31 experience daily persecution for their faith from their families and society, but also see 32 tremendous spiritual growth and conversions. Some in the West see the hidden church as 33 defective and unhealthy, kept hidden because of fear of persecution. This is true in some 34 cases. But hidden churches are sometimes healthier than openly established churches in their 35 faith, their love, their practice of “one anothers,” and even their doctrinal purity. Underground 36 churches should not be despised, but rather recognized as a fully valid expression of the 37 church that in many ways look like the early church in the book of Acts, as well as other 38 examples throughout history, such as China's recent history.

²⁴ This oikos may not be only be the nuclear family, but will normally be inclusive as well of friends and neighbors.

²⁵ As noted in BCO 4.5, “In like manner, Christians whose lot is cast in destitute regions ought to meet regularly for the worship of God.

1 Like yeast spreading through dough, the early church in the Roman Empire spread through 2 the society of that time with neither church bells nor fancy cathedrals. When yeast is at work 3 within the dough, its effect is not immediately evident. Similarly, we often only see the 4 impact of hidden churches at a later time as they grow within the society. Many examples of 5 this kind of impact are taking place today and are cause for great praise.

6
7 The church's covenantal identity exists through participation in the covenant of grace which 8 includes both Jews and Gentiles (WCF 7.5). God's people in the Old Testament were the 9 roots and the trunk of the olive tree, but with the new covenant, the Gentiles were grafted as 10 branches into that same tree (Rom. 11). God's people are to be the salt and light of the earth 11 as they are dispersed all over the globe. We are to be the yeast of the Kingdom permeating 12 the dough. We are sojourners or exiles (1 Pet. 2:12). We are not meant to live in secluded, 13 exclusive ghetto communities; rather, we are to be in the world, yet not of the world.

14
15 In Egypt, there used to be a recurring phenomenon: newlywed couples who were committed 16 Christians looked for apartments in buildings owned by other born-again Christians.
17 Sometimes every resident in the building was a believer. These believers tended to send their 18 children to Christian schools, go to Christian doctors, and work in Christian companies.
19 They lived their Christian lives in isolation, dreaming of one day emigrating to the West 20 when the opportunity opened up. Now some Christian leaders have started asking young 21 couples who have a strong walk with the Lord not to live such lives of isolation and 22 separatism. The slogan that they chose, "manara bikul amara," rhymes in Arabic. It means 23 "a lighthouse in every apartment building." Young couples who have strong relationships 24 with God are encouraged to look for apartments in buildings where Muslims and nominal 25 Christians live, rather than in buildings filled with Christian believers. If Christians are 26 persuading Christians to live boldly as believers in the gospel among Muslims, does it not 27 make sense to encourage MBBs who have a strong walk with the Lord to do the same?

28 A healthy church in the Muslim world is not just to be experienced and lived out on the day 29 of public worship in a church building for 90 minutes (Heb. 10:25). It is also lived out every 30 day of the week, as church members live their lives as salt and light among relatives, 31 workmates, classmates, friends, and neighbors. One of the clearest distinguishing 32 characteristics of a church is the "one another" aspect, taught throughout the New Testament 33 (Jn. 13:34-35; 1 Jn. 1:6-10).

34
35 To stay healthy and growing, church members should seek to have: 1) an intimate relationship 36 with God and to stay in the Word of God, 2) a strong relationship with one another as 37 believers, and 3) transformational relationships with the lost around them so that the gospel 38 can flow to others when they proclaim it.²⁶

²⁶ There is a remarkable change which has taken place among Christians in Egypt as a result of the past 3 years of "revolution". As Christians became co-belligerents with moderate Muslims politically to oppose political Islam (as practiced by the Muslim Brotherhood) the two communities became much closer. Now many

1 music and they can also shatter one another’s lives. We dare not devalue another person, nor 2 do we underestimate his capacity to sin. And when large numbers of people join together 3 and create a culture, it is a very mixed bag. So how do we rightly think about culture?
 4

5 The doctrine of creation includes the principle that everything that God created is good.
 6 Moreover, God is the absolute Creator, and there is no one besides him. Evil people and evil 7 spirits cannot metaphysically bring anything into existence. All that they can do is pervert 8 and twist what God has created. This principle holds true not only with regard to created 9 physical things, like animals and plants, but also with regard to institutions, like marriage 10 and the family, and functions, like governing authority.
 11

12 The doctrines of the fall and redemption, when taken together, remind us that every person 13 is either for God or against him. And those who are for him are only those who have been 14 redeemed by Christ. Consequently, the corruption due to sin and its effects travels through 15 all of human culture; even the aspects of culture we might see as good are thoroughly 16 inadequate to save. And indwelling sin continues to operate in the flesh of Christians.
 17

18 This means that no human culture is pure; sin is present in and taints all cultures. The 19 beliefs and customs of a particular culture are not neutral; everything which people do 20 reflects either obedient submission to or rebellion against God. But there is another reality 21 at work in culture, as well. The doctrine of common grace teaches that by the mercy of God, 22 benefits are given even to unbelievers. Among these benefits are not only physical blessings, 23 like rain and crops (Acts 14:17), but also intellectual and cultural benefits. We see fragments 24 of truth and fragments of moral good, at least in external ways. For example, many non-25 Christian peoples now reflect obedience to the fifth commandment (Ex. 20:12) better than 26 “Christian” nations do, although this is not from a pure heart that honors the true God.
 27

28 Living within human culture (as we all do all of the time) calls for firm vigilance and 29 penetrating critical analysis of corruptions that become manifest in cultures. Cultures are 30 complicated, and sin takes subtle as well as gross forms.
 31

32 Natives to a particular culture are uniquely equipped to conduct this critical analysis. They 33 know their own culture with a depth that an outsider does not, so they can understand many 34 things that outsiders will never grasp. On the other hand, because they are native to the 35 culture, they may also have blind spots to sins that are endemic to the culture. Therefore, 36 within the body of Christ, there is need for cross-cultural engagement and exhortation.
 37

38 When we refer to culture in this paper, it is with the understanding we have just described.
 39 And when we refer to cultural insiders, we are simply referring to those who are native to a 40 culture. When we mention cultural insiders who are believers, it is with appreciation of both

1 their unique place to critique their cultures of origin as well as their need for others to help 2 them to see what they are blind to within their own cultures.

3
4 A wholesale acceptance of culture ignores the inevitable presence and impact of sin. On the 5 other hand, a wholesale rejection of culture ignores the principle of common grace. What is 6 the solution? There is no simple, mechanical formula. We must be wise and discerning 7 within our own culture as must any believing cultural insider within any culture. J.H.
8 Bavinck wisely observed that what is needed is redemptive transformation of cultural 9 practices (possessio), which involves preserving some things, rejecting others, and altering 10 still others in a complex and creative way.²⁷

11 12 Consideration B: We Must Not Add Requirements to the Gospel: Principles from the 13 Jerusalem Council of Acts 15.

14
15 In Acts 15, the church was severely divided over “the Gentile problem.” Gentiles were 16 coming to faith in Christ, but were not adopting Jewish practices such as circumcision 17 (which is a synecdoche for all that is commonly called the Ceremonial Law). The church 18 leaders convened a council to deal with this problem. Peter addressed the Apostles and 19 elders who had gathered at what is commonly called the Jerusalem Council and outlined the 20 problem. The result affirmed that which has guided the church ever since: that salvation is in 21 Christ alone by faith alone, and none may add other requirements. We look now to the text 22 to see if this indeed is so.

23
24 In verses 7-8, Peter reminded the Council that in granting the Holy Spirit to Gentiles, God 25 himself had given incontrovertible proof that the Gentiles were being saved, even though 26 they had not been circumcised.

- 27 • Verse 9: As a result, Peter declared that there is no distinction between Jews and 28 Gentiles.

²⁷ Bavinck explains the term possessio: “The Christian life does not accommodate or adapt itself to heathen forms of life, but it takes the latter in possession and thereby makes them new. Whoever is in Christ is a new creature. Within the framework of the non-Christian life, customs and practices serve idolatrous tendencies and drive a person away from God. The Christian life takes them in hand and turns them in an entirely different direction; they acquire an entirely different content. Even though in external form there is much that resembles past practices, in reality everything has become new, the old has in essence passed away and the new has come. Christ takes the life of a people in his hands, he renews and re-establishes the distorted and deteriorated; he fills each thing, each word, and each practice with a new meaning and gives it a new direction. Such is neither “adaptation,” nor accommodation; it is in essence the legitimate taking possession of something by him to whom all power is given in heaven and on earth.” J.H. Bavinck, An Introduction to the Science of Missions (Phillipsburg: P&R Publishing, 1960), 178-179.

- 1 • Verse 10: Peter then reminded the Jews that even they could not keep the law. So,
- 2 the notion that they should require Gentiles to do so was hypocritical.
- 3 • Verse 11: Finally, he reminded the Council that justification does not come through
- 4 keeping the Law, but is by grace alone, through faith alone, in Christ alone.

5
 6 For Peter, the issue surrounding circumcision was not a matter of trying to make the gospel 7 palatable to Gentiles. Rather, it was a matter of orthodoxy. We face this same danger today.
 8 It is possible for missionaries or churches to add to the pure gospel by adding extra-biblical 9 requirements. In Galatians Paul had very strong things to say about the dangers of 10 proclaiming such a “different gospel.” The questions before the Council were: what must a 11 person do in order to become a worshipper of God? Must he become a Jew? Peter's answer:
 12 Simply have faith in Christ.

13 14 The matter was resolved in vv. 13-21, where James advanced Peter's argument by focusing 15 on God's mission. He noted that inclusion of Gentiles has been part of God's plan since the 16 beginning. James therefore concluded that the church should not trouble them by putting 17 unnecessary barriers or burdens on those who turn to God (while also advising that the 18 Council direct Gentile believers to follow four specific abstentions).

19 20 The events of Acts 15 marked an epochal change for how God’s people in the history of 21 redemption are to understand their place among the nations. No longer would the old 22 boundary markers for God’s people, such as circumcision, apply. Instead, the defining mark 23 of the people of God would be faith in Jesus Christ. This was further clarified and confirmed 24 by Paul in his epistle to the Galatians, where Paul clearly and emphatically deals with the 25 same concerns as the Council affirmed.

26
 27 Clearly there exist implications from the Council’s decisions in Acts 15 for how the gospel 28 reaches into cultures and people groups. Notably, rendering its decision about circumcision, 29 the Council addresses Gentiles (people of other nations) as believers and then was mostly 30 silent except for a few specific requirements. In light of that, here are some principles for 31 the way the gospel should express itself in different cultural settings.

32 33 First, the Council modeled that none may impose requirements other than true faith in 34 Christ on another, including across cultures, for admission into the body of Christ. To 35 impose other requirements would be to add requirements to salvation, and so the 36 soteriological concern is closely connected to a principle of not imposing one culture’s 37 practices onto another for purposes of admission into the church. Consider Denial 13b, “We 38 deny that believers must adopt particular patterns of behavior beyond those explicitly or by 39 good and necessary consequence mandated by Scripture.”

1 Note further that the Council did not require the Jews to give up circumcision. Instead, at 2 least at that time, Jewish Christians were allowed to be Jews while continuing the practice of 3 circumcision, and Gentile Christians remained Gentiles (non-Jews) and were not forced to 4 practice circumcision. These two results taken together are significant. If the problem was 5 only that Jews were trusting in circumcision to make them right with God, then circumcision 6 would have been forbidden for all. However, the Council does not do that. They implicitly 7 allow Jewish believers to practice circumcision while not requiring it of the Gentile 8 believers.

9 10 Thus, while other passages will refine this understanding, it is important to see that in the 11 immediate context of the Council decisions of Acts 15, both Christ-centered soteriology and 12 the existence of faithful yet diverse religious/cultural practice is upheld. While there is no 13 implication here that the continued practice of Christ-less religion is affirmed, the rest of the 14 New Testament affirms the thorough redefinition of these communities via their identification 15 with Christ above all else. God is reconciled to both Jews and Gentiles through Christ 16 alone. Nevertheless each group retained social and cultural particularities.

17 18 Second, the Council tacitly recognized that some cultural practices are indeed sinful. So, 19 when the Council instructed the Gentiles to abstain from things polluted by idols and sexual 20 immorality (v. 20-21), they established the principle that all Christians are called to abstain 21 from sinful practices of one's culture.

22
23 Third, when the Council further required Gentiles to abstain from things strangled and from 24 blood, they determined in principle Christians should be sensitive to the cultural sensibilities 25 of their brothers for the sake of the mission and peace of the church. As Matthew Henry 26 observes, "We must therefore give them time, must meet them half-way; they must be 27 borne with awhile, and brought on gradually, and we must comply with them as far as we 28 *can without betraying our gospel liberty."*²⁸

29 30 We see this same principle illustrated in the following chapter. In Acts 16, immediately after 31 Paul had argued that circumcision was no longer a requirement for inclusion among God's 32 people, Paul circumcised Timothy. On the heels of Acts 15, this seems rather shocking, until 33 one realizes Paul's motive. Paul circumcised Timothy, not because Timothy needed it, but 34 so that Timothy could more effectively minister to Jews.

35
36 Therefore, Acts 15, together with its application in Acts 16, teaches several important 37 principles for gospel mission.

²⁸ Matthew Henry, Matthew Henry's Commentary on the Whole Bible (McLean: Macdonald Pub., 1983), vol. vi. Acts to Revelation, 194. It is ironic that here the mature attitude of bearing with the weak is for newly converted Gentiles to bear with the immature spiritual understanding of the traditional people of God, the Jews.

- 1 1. When people believe the gospel, those same people are encouraged to continue living
- 2 faithfully within their culture.
- 3 2. Furthermore, as Christians interact with those who are culturally different, they should
- 4 be careful not to give unnecessary offense.
- 5 3. Yet, regardless of the cultural setting, Christians must observe the moral law of God.

6

7 In his commentary on Acts 15, John Calvin wrote, “We must beware first of this plague, that 8 some prescribe not a law to other some after their manner, that the example of one church be 9 not a prejudice of a common rule.”²⁹ According to Calvin, this passage not only signals an 10 epochal change from the Old Covenant, but also teaches that one church ought not to impose 11 its practices—other than those of the Scriptures—on another. For example, in many Muslim 12 cultures it is rude (or even illegal) to consume food or drink in public during the Ramadan 13 fast. MBBs may find it easy to continue to be sensitive and not cause unnecessary offense 14 within Muslim society by choosing not to eat or drink publicly. Is that loss of freedom 15 legitimate and constructive? Perhaps an MBB could decide to use that loss of freedom as a 16 reminder to pray for his family and friends.

17

18 These principles should govern the church’s mission in every setting, including its mission 19 to those living in the Muslim world.

20

21 Consideration C: We are Called to Live in the World But Not of the World:
 22 1 Corinthians 7:17-24 and its Context.

23

24 The entire epistle of 1 Corinthians addresses the practicalities of what it takes to live a holy 25 life in an unholy culture—how to be “in” that culture without being “of” it. The city of 26 Corinth was known for being particularly immoral and given to pagan idolatry and 27 philosophies. Paul addressed the Corinthian believers as saints or holy ones and taught them 28 how to live in light of their new identity as holy ones in Christ.

29

30 “To the church of God which is in Corinth, to those who have been sanctified in Christ 31 Jesus, saints by calling” (1 Cor. 1:2; See also 1 Cor. 6:1-2; 14:33; 16:1, 15; 2 Cor. 1:1; 8:4; 32 9:1, 12; 13:13). Paul addresses several issues facing the Corinthian Christians:

33

- 34 • Demonstrating the wisdom of the Spirit in a culture that venerated sophistry
- 35 (chapters 1–3)
- 36 • Following servant-leadership in a culture that loved and worshipped wisdom and
- 37 power (chapter 4)
- 38 • Living sexually pure lives in a culture that embraced gross sexual immorality
- 39 (chapters 5-6)

²⁹ John Calvin, Trans. William Pringle, Calvin's Commentaries (Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, reprinted 1984), vol. xix, 34.

- 1 • Handling conflicts in a godly way in a culture that loved to take things to court 2 (chapter 6)
- 3 • Preserving family relationships in a culture where families were broken (chapter 7)
- 4 • Maintaining social interactions in a culture where everything was laced with idolatry 5 (chapter 8)
- 6 • Using freedom to serve in a culture that regarded freedom as a license to sin (chapter 7 9)
- 8 • Avoiding the temptations of idolatry in a culture where idolatry was normative 9 (chapter 10)
- 10 • Learning to worship in a godly way in a culture where worship was an opportunity 11 for self-indulgence (chapter 11)
- 12 • Using one's gifts to serve in a culture where one's strengths were used to serve 13 oneself (chapters 12–14)
- 14 • Living based on the resurrection in a culture where the resurrection was regarded as 15 foolishness (chapter 15)

16

17 These issues are, of course, very relevant for MBBs who are trying to follow Christ in the 18 midst of their Muslim community.

19

20 In 1 Corinthians chapters 5-10 Paul dives into the difficult and perplexing practical realities 21 on the ground in Corinth. Paul opens and closes this section by pointing to issues at stake 22 when living as cultural insiders in the midst of an ungodly cultural context. He opened this 23 section with:

24

25 I have written you in my letter not to associate with sexually immoral 26 people—not at all meaning the people of this world who are immoral, or the 27 greedy and swindlers, or idolaters. In that case you would have to leave this 28 world. (1 Corinthians 5:9-10)

29

30 He closed this section with:

31

32 So whether you eat or drink or whatever you do, do it all for the glory of God.
33 Do not cause anyone to stumble, whether Jews, Greeks or the church of 34 God—even as I try to please everybody in every way. For I am not seeking 35 my own good but the good of many, so that they may be saved. (1 Corinthians 36 10:31-33)

37

38 In the midst of this discussion of how to be in the world but not of the world, Paul addresses 39 the issue of marriage in 1 Corinthians 7. We might wonder how a chapter on marriage relates 40 to questions about living faithfully within Muslim society, but Paul himself applies this 41 principle beyond the immediate issue of marriage. Looking at the text in its immediate

1 context and its broader context demonstrate that the principles embedded and emphasized in 2 1 Corinthians 7:17–24 have important implications for one of the broad themes of 1 Corinthians:
 3 how to live a holy life in an unholy context.

4

5 The Immediate Context

6

7 Paul starts 1 Corinthians 7 by addressing the value of remaining single. As Paul continues to 8 address issues related to marriage, he comes to a sticky problem. What if a woman comes to 9 faith in Christ and her husband is not a believer: should she divorce him? He answers by 10 saying: “If a woman has a husband who is not a believer and he is willing to live with her, 11 she must not divorce him.”

12

13 It could be that what was on Paul’s mind was for the believing partner to remain in the 14 marriage in the hope that the other partner would come to know Christ. He was also 15 concerned with the impact on the children of a believing and unbelieving spouse. This 16 accords with his passion to see the gospel penetrate and transform families, and not only 17 transforming individuals. To give his argument more power, Paul appealed to a broad 18 principle that is one of the implicit yet foundational principles for his entire letter: the 19 importance and implications of living a holy life in an unholy context. Here, Paul lays down 20 a principle that not only applies to marriage, but to other contexts as well.

21

22 [17] Nevertheless, each one should retain the place in life that the Lord
 23 assigned to him and to which God has called him. This is the rule I lay down 24 in all the churches. [18] Was a man already circumcised when he was called?
 25 He should not become uncircumcised. Was a man uncircumcised when he was 26 called? He should not be circumcised. [19] Circumcision is nothing and 27 uncircumcision is nothing. Keeping God’s commands is what counts. [20]
 28 Each one should remain in the situation which he was in when God called 29 him. [21] Were you a slave when you were called? Don’t let it trouble you—
 30 although if you can gain your freedom, do so. [22] For he who was a slave 31 when he was called by the Lord is the Lord’s freedman; similarly, he who was 32 a free man when he was called is Christ’s slave. [23] You were bought at a 33 price; do not become slaves of men. [24] Brothers, each man, as responsible to 34 God, should remain in the situation God called him to. (1 Corinthians 7:17-24)

35

36 As you read through this passage it should be obvious that his comments about circumcision 37 vs. uncircumcision and living as a slave vs. living as a free man are intended to be applied 38 beyond remaining married to an unbeliever. In verse 17, Paul says that remaining in the 39 context in which a person was when God called him can be an assignment by God and a 40 calling from Him. To put it another way, if one refuses to remain in the situation he was in 41 when God called him, he risks abandoning God’s assignment and calling. Then Paul says

1 that remaining in one's context is a principle that he teaches and lays down in all the churches.
2 Actually, he repeats this principle of remaining in context or retaining that place in life three 3 times in this short text, in vv. 17, 20 and 24. This is the principle he lays down in all the 4 churches.

5
6 Paul says that this principle not only applies to marriage, but also to the Jew-Gentile 7 controversy and to the issue of status in society. To the Jews who have become believers in 8 Christ, he tells them not to become Gentile Christians. To the Gentile Christians, he says not 9 to get circumcised and become Jewish Christians. Being Jewish or being Gentile is nothing.
10 What counts is surrender to Christ and retaining one's own situation for the sake of the gospel.

11
12 Paul then applies this same principle to the issue of status in society, evident in those days 13 most starkly in the form of slavery. Today status in society has relevance to employment, 14 citizenship, race, and social class. What Paul was addressing in his context (as exemplified 15 in his letter to Philemon) was this: What if a slave comes to know Christ and his owner is a 16 believer in Christ as well? Should the Christian slave demand his liberation? How does Paul 17 address this issue? He tells the Christian slave:

18
19 [21] Were you a slave when you were called? Don't let it trouble you—
20 although if you can gain your freedom, do so. [22] For he who was a slave 21 when he was called by the Lord is the Lord's freedman; similarly, he who was 22 a free man when he was called is Christ's slave. [23] You were bought at a 23 price; do not become slaves of men.

24
25 Paul is saying to the Christian slave that if he can gain his freedom, it will be great. But if he 26 cannot, he should not indulge in self-pity, resenting his boss who is his owner. Paul reminds 27 him that although he is a slave, he is a free man on the inside. Paul motivates him to focus 28 on the freedom that he already possesses. Then he reminds him that the slave-owner, if he is 29 a believer, is a slave of Christ after all. In other words, we live in an unjust and broken world, 30 but as we stand before Christ, the ground is level. So he tells this slave, repeating the same 31 principle for the third time, to retain the place in life that the Lord assigned to him and to 32 which God has called him, and thus to embrace his circumstances rather than resent them.
33 Real inner freedom is not shaped by circumstances, but in being able to choose the right 34 attitude in the midst of those circumstances (1 Thess. 5:18).

35
36 Therefore, this basic principle—to remain in the status in which one was called—is 37 applicable not only to marriage and to the Jew/Gentile issues but also to one's status in 38 society. Of course, there will be important exceptions to this rule when Scriptural teaching is 39 violated. One result of the Jerusalem Council in Acts 15 was that Gentiles did not need to 40 become Jews in order to be accepted as believers in Christ; they were free to work out their 41 faith in their own cultural setting, without engaging in its sinful, idolatrous, and immoral

1 practices. Furthermore, Paul says that, for the sake of the church’s mission, one should 2 retain the place in life that the Lord assigned to him and to which God has called him. This 3 applies not only to one’s marriage status, but also to his status in society (slave or free), 4 whether Jew or Gentile.

5
 6 Paul does not encourage anyone to engage in sin. One must not continue to worship idols.
 7 However, in the very next chapter, Paul says that even committed Christians have liberty to 8 still eat meat offered to idols. If a believer is told that the meat has been offered in sacrifice, 9 he should not eat it – not because it is wrong to eat, but due to the conscience of the one who 10 pointed out that it was sacrificial meat. So the cultural meaning must impact the behavior of 11 a follower of Christ. The first priority is always love that does not cause others to stumble.
 12 This is a clear example of remaining in the world without being of the world. The CR rightly 13 states: "In short, Paul acknowledges in 1 Corinthians 8-10 the complexities of Christians 14 living within a culture hostile to the faith. He does not counsel a categorical separation from 15 the world around us (cf. 1 Cor. 4:10). Neither is he unaware of or indifferent to the genuine 16 spiritual threats posed to the Christian attempting to live in the context of the culture in 17 which the Lord has called him to live (cf. 1 Cor. 7:17-24)."³⁰

18
 19 Consideration D. We Must Not Participate With Demons in False Worship: A 20 Warning from 1 Corinthians 10:19-20.

21
 22 When the Apostle Paul continues his argument about meats sacrificed to idols as being 23 nothing, he adds a strong word of caution, indeed a strong warning, in 1 Corinthians 10:19-24 20, which states:

25
 26 [19] Do I mean then that a sacrifice offered to an idol is anything, or that an 27 idol is anything? [20] No, but the sacrifices of pagans are offered to demons, 28 not to God, and I do not want you to be participants with demons.
 29

30 Charles Hodge gives an excellent and helpful commentary on the last phrase as follows:

31
 32 By fellowship or communion . . . we are said to have fellowship with those 33 between whom and us there are congeniality of mind, community of interest, 34 and friendly intercourse . . . In this sense the worshippers of idols have 35 fellowship with evil spirits. They are united to them so as to form one 36 community, with a common character and a common destiny. Into this state of 37 fellowship they are brought by sacrificing to them; that is, by idolatry, which 38 is an act of apostasy from the true God, and of association with the kingdom 39 of darkness. It was of great importance for the Corinthians to know that it did 40 not depend on their intention whether they came into communion with devils.
 41 The heathen did not intend to worship devils, and yet they did it; what would ³⁰ See the final paragraph of the 2014 Committee Report, Section A.1.2.

1 it avail, therefore, to the reckless Corinthians, who attended the sacrificial 2 feasts of the heathen, to say that they did not intend to worship idols? The 3 question was not, what their intention was, but what was the import and effect 4 of their conduct. A man need not intend to burn himself when he puts his hand 5 into the fire; or to pollute his soul when he frequents the haunts of vice. The 6 effect is altogether independent of intention. This principle applies with all its 7 force to compliance with the religious services of the heathen at the present 8 day. Those who in pagan countries join in the religious rites of the heathen, 9 are just as much guilty of idolatry, and are just as certainly brought into 10 fellowship with devils, as the nominal Christians of Corinth, who, although 11 they knew that an idol was nothing, and that there is but one God, yet 12 frequented the heathen feasts . . . Whatever their intention may be, they worship 13 the host if they bow down to it with the crowd who intend to adore it. By the 14 force of the act we become one with those in whose worship we join. We 15 constitute with them and with the objects of their worship one communion.³¹ 16

17 There is a need for caution lest the MBB find himself in fellowship with demons if he 18 participates in worship inside the Islamic religious institutions.
19

20 In 1 Corinthians 10:19-20, Paul was specifically talking about worship and this is applicable 21 in Muslim contexts. A few verses later in 1 Corinthians 10:27, Paul is not at all forbidding 22 social interaction and associating with unbelievers. Right discernment while maintaining 23 relationships on the one hand (associating), and separating from false religion (not 24 participating) on the other, may be a difficult process and will require wisdom and grace 25 while practicing careful application of the Scriptures to the details of a particular Muslim 26 context.
27

28 Summarizing the Significance of the Four Considerations

29
30 These four considerations reinforce our biblical understanding that believers are encouraged 31 to live faithfully within their existing cultures of origin, even if those cultures contain 32 elements hostile to Christ. Salvation is a gift of God received by faith; credible profession of 33 faith is the key means of discerning one's faith in Christ, and Scripture admits no other 34 requirements for acceptance of believers into the church. Culture is not neutral, and thus 35 MBBs living within the Muslim world, like believers everywhere, must exercise biblical 36 discernment as they participate in their cultures. MBBs in cultures where a strong connection 37 to false religion prevails will need to be especially careful about participation in cultural 38 practices that would be harmful to themselves or the consciences of other believers while 39 continuing to associate with unbelievers, without compromise, that the transforming work of 40 the gospel would prosper.

PART 3: ADDITIONAL RECOMMENDED QUESTIONS FOR PCA-SUPPORTED MISSIONARIES IN MUSLIM-MAJORITY CONTEXTS

The Committee Report provided a list of questions that will aid missionaries and churches as they consider how to serve well in Muslim-majority contexts. The following questions should be seen as supplemental and aimed at helping churches and missionaries think through the additional realities and considerations discussed in this report.

- How do the missionaries struggle with their own identities on the field? Do those around them see authenticity or deception regarding their identities? If deception, what do they need to do to remedy the situation?
- To what degree are they living among and spending time with Muslims?
- Who are the Muslim contacts for whom they are praying and with whom they are building relationships?
- Who are the MBBs they are discipling? What materials are they using in discipling, and why? Are these MBBs spending time with their Muslim family, friends, neighbors and colleagues? Are they sharing Christ with Muslims? Do any of them experience crippling insecurity and fear?
- What church do missionaries attend on the mission field? How do they communicate to their MBBs their convictions about Hebrews 10:24–25? How is their ministry leading to the establishment of faithful expressions of biblical church?
- How are they helping MBBs look to the Scriptures to find guidance for the difficult issues that they face? To what degree are they telling them their own answers rather than training them to find those answers in the Scriptures?
- Are the MBBs with whom they work focused on maintaining or developing strong relationships with family and friends in their birth communities? Are they earning the right to speak by demonstrating a lifestyle that has been transformed by the gospel? Are the MBBs becoming better students, better husbands, better wives, better employees as a result of their coming to know Christ? How?
- How do the missionaries encourage MBBs not to rupture their relationships with family and friends and yet at the same time not to live in deception?

PART 4: CONCLUDING THOUGHTS

In this paper, we have sought to present five realities MBBs face while living in Muslim societies and four considerations that would undergird and inform our approach to mission:

Realities on the Ground Facing Muslim Background Believers

- Reality #1: It is Important that MBBs Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.
- Reality #2: MBBs Can Live Biblically within Muslim Societies.

- 1 • Reality #3: Churches within Muslim Societies Do Not Always Accept MBBs.
- 2 • Reality #4: Living within Muslim Societies Requires MBBs to be Vigilant to Avoid
- 3 Syncretism.
- 4 • Reality #5: Growing in Christ within Muslim Societies Holds Significant Challenges
- 5 for MBBs.
- 6

7 Biblical Considerations for Facing Realities on the Ground

- 8 • Consideration A: Every Culture has “Good” and Evil Aspects.
- 9 • Consideration B: We Must Not Add Requirements to the Gospel: Principles from the
- 10 Jerusalem Council of Acts 15.
- 11 • Consideration C: We are Called to Live in the World But Not of the World:
- 12 1 Corinthians 7:17-24 and its Context.
- 13 • Consideration D: We Must Not Participate with Demons in False Worship: A
- 14 Warning from 1 Corinthians 10:19-20.
- 15

16 We have seen that truly faithful and fruitful MBBs are those who are fully surrendered to 17 Christ and who are called to bear witness within the Muslim world. They face the difficulties 18 of living within Muslim societies without compromise. Out of love for their families, 19 friends, neighbors and colleagues, they live as obedient witnesses to the gospel, recognizing 20 that persecution will come. They willingly endure such persecution in the cause of serving 21 Jesus Christ, and place no extra-biblical requirements on other believers as conditions of 22 fellowship, insisting only on a common faith in Christ alone for their salvation. They are 23 “cultural insiders” in their birth communities who do not commit syncretism through 24 remaining within Islamic religious institutions. They are called to stay relationally (physically 25 and socially) connected to their relatives and friends in their birth communities, focusing on 26 developing relationships so that the gospel can spread rapidly and be honored (2 Thess. 3:1).
27 At the same time, they actively seek fellowship with other believers, serving and loving 28 them as Jesus commanded. And they worship God as Father, Son, and Holy Spirit with other 29 believers, growing toward becoming full expressions of the church while celebrating their 30 connectedness to the historic and global church.

31
32 Let us encourage and pray during these days of opportunity for those believers in Christ 33 brought up in Muslim families, who desire to make the gospel available to others within 34 their own communities. Let us pray that they would serve Him whole-heartedly, living a 35 transformed life and proclaiming the gospel with increasing confidence. May the gospel 36 infiltrate many communities in the Muslim world, and may God build his church there to his 37 resounding praise around the world.

MINORITY REPORT (2013)

[NOTE: Page numbers at bottom right are from the 2013 Commissioner Handbook and are referenced in Attachment 2 of the 2014 Committee Report.]

AD INTERIM STUDY COMMITTEE ON INSIDER MOVEMENTS A PARTIAL REPORT (PART TWO OF TWO PARTS)

With appreciation for most of what is in the SCIM Committee Report, I believe that the work of the committee would be made more complete if the assembly would make both the Committee Report and the Minority Report available for study to the presbyteries, sessions and missions committees of our denomination.

I, the undersigned, a minority of the Committee appointed to evaluate the Insider Movement and report to the 41st General Assembly, bring the following motion as a substitute to the motion of the committee:

That the 41st General Assembly adopt the following recommendations:

1. That “Part Two – A Call to Faithful Witness: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements” serve as a Partial Report (Part Two of Two Parts).
2. That the 41st General Assembly make available and recommend for study “Part Two - A Call to faithful Witness: Theology, Gospel Missions, and Insider Movements" to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.
3. That the 41st General Assembly make available and recommend for study the paper in the Minority Report entitled “Addressing Realities on the Ground” to its presbyteries, sessions, and missions committees.
4. That the 41st General Assembly dismiss the ad interim Study Committee on Insider Movements with thanks.

Executive Summary

1
2 This Minority Report does not advocate for all that is represented as Muslim insider 3 ministry, but it contends that there is a strong biblical basis for some aspects of insider 4 ministries.

5 6 Approximately 2.1 billion people in the world today identify themselves as “Christian” in 7 some sense of the word. Many of these are nominal, or cultural, Christians, many of whom 8 do not attend church or personally follow many of the core teachings of orthodox 9 Christianity.

10
11 Similarly, many of the 1.7 billion Muslims in the world are nominal Muslims¹ and secular 12 Muslims² who do not attend the mosque and do not personally follow many of the core 13 teachings of Islam. Still, they regard themselves as Muslims.

14
15 The issue is, how does a Muslim who receives Christ, and is thus in Christ, relate to the 16 culture and religious context into which he was born?

17 18 In every culture, particularly in those where the gospel is breaking new ground, the 19 relationship of the believer to his culture is challenging and often messy. That was true in 20 the first century, and it is true today.

21
22 Paul wrote to the Corinthians regarding this kind of messiness: “I wrote to you in my letter 23 not to associate with immoral people; I did not mean with the immoral people of this world, 24 or with the covetous and swindlers, or with idolaters, for then you would have to go out of 25 the world” (1 Corinthians 5:9–10).

26
27 Muslim background believers (MBBs) can live with integrity within the Muslim world by 28 honoring Muhammad as a leader without revering him as a Prophet. Not all Muslims who 29 come to Christ will have a clear conscience about this, but some do and are thus remaining 30 in their context with the hope that the gospel will spread there.

31
32 True Muslim background believers who remain in their Muslim context are those who are 33 truly born from above and truly in Christ, but who are called to remain in their cultural and 34 relational context in order to bring the gospel into the heart of the Muslim world. That is, 35 they are called to stay relationally connected to their relatives and friends in their birth 36 communities so that the gospel will spread there.

² Muslims with liberal interpretation of certain doctrines.

1 It is vital that such insiders not compromise orthodox biblical beliefs or live deceptively.
2 This is not easy or simple, but it is consistent with Jesus’ call for His followers to live in the 3 world but not of the world. This paper seeks to address some of the difficulties and 4 complexities that Muslim background believers must face if they are to live in the Muslim 5 world while not being of it.

Preface: Overture # 9

14
15 16
17

This report concurs with most of the Committee Report in how it addressed Overture 9 (June 10, 2011). The body of this report addresses some supplementary material that attempts to fill in some of the gaps.

Introduction

19 20 21
22

We live in a broken and messy world.
A certain Muslim background believer in Christ (MBB) was discipled by a Baptist missionary in Israel. He had three wives when he came to Christ. He said to his American mentor:

33

Don’t criticize me for having three wives at one time. You Americans just marry one right after the other after each divorce!” The missionary who knew this man and his family well wrote: “The amazing thing was his first wife was about to die from old age and child bearing. We prayed for her and she got well! Most of her adult children became believers. His second wife was a fundamentalist and she divorced him, but her daughter and son became believers. His third wife became an evangelist to other women, and several of her brothers and sisters came to the Lord. So, the Lord worked in that [messy] situation in spite of the multiple marriages. It took some time for the gospel to permeate the social fabric. Life is never easy, but God is faithful!³

³ Permission to use this quote was granted by the missionary. For the full story of "Barnabas" go to Discipling Middle Eastern Believers by Ray G. Register. GlobalEdAdvance Press, pp. 35-37 and throughout the book.

1 While this Minority Report is not advocating polygamy, this example illustrates how God 2 works in situations that are outside of His design for how we are to live.

3
4 With appreciation for most of what is in the SCIM Committee Report, this Minority Report 5 agrees with most of what is in the Committee Report and differs at certain points as it gives 6 more attention to the reality on the ground. With that it seeks to address certain gaps.

7 8 The Committee Report has rich sections that lay the biblical foundation to the debate: the 9 history, the divine speech, revelation, life is a religious reply, the Holy Spirit, and the visible 10 church. The exegesis of Romans 1 is superb.

11 12 The Committee Report has solid theology and is powerful on protecting orthodoxy in 13 scholarly language. The Minority Report is simple and practical and deals with the insider 14 movements in understandable language to the laity and to the missions committees in our 15 churches. The Minority Report contributes a dimension on how the gospel can and is 16 penetrating the Muslim world. In Matthew 16, we see an advancing church where the gates 17 of hell cannot stand against it. The Minority Report presents a tone of faith that the Muslim 18 world can be penetrated with the gospel just as the Roman Empire was penetrated in the 19 first century. We are at a unique time in history: The gospel is already taking root in many 20 parts of the Muslim world, and we need to be careful not to miss out on what God is doing 21 because of our genuine concerns about the defense of orthodoxy. Both protecting orthodoxy 22 and having a passion for the expansion of the gospel are important and should be in place.

23
24 H.J. Bavinck, in An Introduction to the Science of Missions (1960), addresses the difference 25 between accommodation and the possessio principle:

26
27 To what extent must a new church which has developed within a specific 28 national community accommodate and adjust itself to the customs, practices, 29 and mores current among a people?

30
31 Bavinck goes on to address the power of the gospel in transforming the lives of people and 32 impacting cultures. It is a description of a church in which the gates of hell cannot stand 33 against it as it advances to possess the nations. This would be true as long as God's people 34 are careful not go to the nations with a "possessio" conquering motive, but with a 35 "possessio" expressed in meekness and humility following in the footsteps of Christ 36 (Philippians 2:5–11). The reality of God's providential oversight over all of life and history 37 cannot be neglected in considering cross-cultural mission work. There are wholesome 38 features in aspects of all cultures, as recognized in the doctrine of common grace. Careful 39 observation and a learner's attitude are thus essential to effective cross-cultural work. One 40 must discern where God has already been at work, where people already have insights that

1 point toward deeper biblical truths. The gospel should not be presented as a total antithesis 2 to existing life and culture; rather, it must resonate with the best in any cultural expression 3 while calling for a new and total allegiance to the resurrected Christ. Bavinck continues:

4
 5 ‘Accommodation’ connotes something of a denial, of a mutilation. We would, 6 therefore prefer to use the term possessio, to take in possession. The Christian 7 life does not accommodate or adapt itself to heathen forms of life, but it takes 8 the latter in possession and thereby makes them new. Whoever is in Christ is a 9 new creature. Within the framework of the non-Christian life, customs and 10 practices serve idolatrous tendencies and drive a person away from God. The 11 Christian life takes them in hand and turns them in an entirely different 12 direction; they acquire an entirely different content. Even though in external 13 form there is much that resembles past practices, in reality everything has 14 become new, the old has in essence passed away and the new has come. Christ 15 takes the life of a people in his hands, he renews and re-establishes the 16 distorted and deteriorated; he fills each thing, each word, and each practice 17 with a new meaning and gives it a new direction. Such is neither ‘adaptation,’ 18 nor accommodation; it is in essence the legitimate taking possession of 19 something by him to whom all power is given in heaven and on earth.⁴ 20

21 What Bavinck describes is perhaps what some insider movements are doing—taking existing 22 socio-religious forms, terms and categories and filing them with new Christ-centered 23 meanings.

24 Important Terminology

25
 26
 27 Approximately 2.1 billion people in the world today, roughly 33 percent of the world’s 28 population, identify themselves as “Christian” in some sense of the word. Many of them are 29 nominal or cultural Christians who do not attend church. Historically, the term Christianity 30 has referred to the Global Church, whereas “Christendom” has only referred to the regions of 31 the world where Christianity had significant political and social dominance. “Christendom” 32 was the portion of the world in which Christianity prevailed, or which was governed under 33 Christian institutions. In this Minority Report, for lack of a better term, I will use the 34 expression “Christendom” to describe the huge block of nations, peoples and cultures that are 35 “Christian,” at least in name. When I speak of Christendom, I am addressing the socio/36 political/religious entity or community which is associated with Christianity. According to 37 our terminology, Christendom includes all the various branches of Christianity, including folk 38 Christianity and cults that claim to be Christian. We should bear in mind, however, that an 39 unknown percentage of the 2.1 billion people that make up Christendom are included by 40 physical birth only and not because they are born again or living according to the Scriptures.

⁴ J.H. Bavinck “An Introduction to the Science of Missions,” 1960, p. 169.

1 In this Minority Report, for lack of a better term, I will use the expression “Muslim world” 2 to describe the huge block of nations, peoples and cultures that are “Muslim,” at least in 3 name. When I speak of the Muslim world, I am addressing the socio/political/religious entity
4 or community which is associated with Islam. We should bear in mind, however, that a 5 high⁵ percentage of the 1.7 billion people that make up the Muslim world are there by physical 6 birth and not because they are practicing Muslims.

7 8 The Minority Report complements the Committee Report on a number of issues:

- 9 • A missional interpretation of one of the main texts in Scripture regarding the 10 insider model.
- 11 • A contrast between the two entities of Christendom and the Muslim world and 12 how that contrast affects conversion.
- 13 • Identifying the existence of core, social, and corporate identities.
- 14 • Authenticity as insiders within the Muslim World without deception.
- 15 • The spheres of theological preference and spheres of theological tolerance.

16
17 In summary, the Committee Report gives a great deal of attention to the absolutes of how 18 things ought to be, and the Minority Report gives more attention to the reality on the 19 ground.

20
21 Other important questions will be addressed in this Minority Report such as: How do 22 believers who remain in their birth community think of Muhammad and the Qur’an without 23 living in self-deception and without deceiving others? What is Islam like for the majority of 24 low-practice Muslims? Are there openings and fertile ground within the Muslim world 25 where the gospel can take root and spread? Also, this Minority Report provides an 26 international perspective and complements the Committee Report by adding balance and 27 richness that come with a diversity of perspectives. On their website,⁶ John Frame and Vern 28 Poythress of Westminster Theological Seminary address the topic of the wealth that comes 29 from the diversity of perspectives, describing their important understanding of 30 Perspectivalism. They note, 31

32 God’s knowledge is not only omniscient, but omniperspectival. He knows from 33 his own infinite perspective; but that infinite perspective includes a knowledge of 34 all created perspectives, possible and actual... One way to increase our knowledge 35 and our level of certainty is by supplementing our own perspectives with those of 36 others.

⁵ Percentages of high-practice Muslims will be addressed later in this report.

⁶ <http://www.frame-poythress.org/a-primer-on-perspectivalism/>

1 There is a tendency for people to live in a bubble. Especially since 9/11, it has become very 2 easy for Christians in the West to surround themselves with people who have the same 3 perceptions about Islam and who agree with their assumptions and conclusions.

4
 5 We know that salvation is by grace alone, through faith alone and in Christ alone, yet at the 6 same time there is great value in understanding other religions, philosophies and cultures. In 7 the book Power Religion, Michael Horton wrote:

8 9 Indeed Paul had knowledge. Not only was he a well educated Pharisee, he 10 demonstrated a remarkable facility with secular literature and philosophy by 11 quoting pagan poets and writers from memory... Paul quoted from the Cretan poet 12 Epimenides, from the Cilician poet Aratus, and from the Hymn of Zeus, by 13 Cleanthes. This he also does elsewhere, to the Corinthians (1 Corinthians 15:33) 14 and Titus (1:12). Notice that Paul took the time to become familiar with the 15 culture he was addressing (and quite possibly not simply for evangelistic 16 purposes), and yet he used that familiarity to bridge the communication, not 17 accommodation.⁷

18 19 Furthermore, Frame and Poythress address the richness in a variety of perspectives under the 20 lordship of Christ and the authority of the Scriptures, so no human is complete by himself.

21
 22 It is not that we come to look at things from God’s perspective rather than our 23 own. We are not God, so we cannot see things as he does. And we can never step 24 out of our own skin, so to speak, and set aside the perspective of our own thoughts 25 and bodies. But as we can enrich our perspective by looking at things from 26 different angles by consulting other people, and by observing other places and 27 cultures, much more can we enrich it by consulting God’s perspective.⁸

28
 29 Because of 9/11, and because of radical Islam and the many books written by Christians 30 about Islam, it has become easy for many Christians in the West to paint with broad brush
 31 strokes and to demonize all of the Muslim world. Furthermore, a huge controversy occurred 32 regarding ministry models in Bangladesh, where a great deal of money was raised for both 33 sides in the opposing debate. This large shadow⁹ should not color the conclusions regarding 34 all the Insider Movements (IM) everywhere in the world. Not all IM ministries are like the 35 IM of Bangladesh. There have been excesses in IM ministries that this report will strongly 36 disagree with, but we need to be careful not to let our unique historical context—post-9/11 37 and post-Bangladesh—color our lenses and consequently, with a broad brush, dismiss all

⁷ Michael Horton “Power Religion.” Pages 329–330.

⁸ <http://www.frame-poythress.org/a-primer-on-perspectivalism/>

⁹ The Bangladesh situation is a complex one. While theological differences exist, other factors, such as unresolved personal conflicts, contribute as well.

1 fanatics. The road to the gospel starts for many Muslims when they move through the 2 probing or prompting of the Holy Spirit from fanaticism to open-mindedness.

3
4 Since 9/11 there has been a resurgence of Islam and mosque-building in America. According 5 to a Pew Research study, by the end of 2011 the number of mosques in the United States
6 was 2,106,¹² and the number of high-identity Muslims who attend Friday at the mosques 7 was 349,525.¹³ The study estimates that the number of Muslims in America is about 8 2,595,000.¹⁴ Therefore the percentage of high-identity and high-practice Muslims in the 9 United States is about 13%. It would be wrong for us to assume that all Muslims are high-
10 practice like these 13% in America. Are not the remaining 87% low-practice Muslims¹⁵ 11 actually Muslims as well? In fact, the Muslims who belong to the 87% see themselves as 12 “the real Muslims,” and they see the rest as fanatics who are ruining the reputation of Islam.

13
14 The 15-year civil war in Lebanon was between two different communities, “Christianity” 15 and “Islam,” with a long history of division based on their religious affiliation. Many people 16 died on both sides of the conflict. It was not a war between two theologies and two religions, 17 but between two cultural entities or communities. Would we Christians want to be represented 18 by the “Christian” Phalangists in Lebanon who were engaged in the Lebanese civil war and 19 were responsible for the massacre of thousands of Palestinian Muslims in the Sabra and 20 Shatila camps?¹⁶ Of course not, and this is how the majority of Muslims feel, refusing to be 21 lumped with the Muslim fundamentalists.

22
23 High-practice Muslims are a very small percentage within the Muslim world. As a result of 24 al Qaeda and how it impacted the reputation of Muslims, along with the Arab Spring and the 25 revolution that spread in some Middle Eastern countries, many Muslims are going through 26 an identity crisis. Many Muslims see themselves as moderate or as practicing the best of 27 Islam while rejecting the excesses and distortions of what they perceive as the “true Islam.”
28 Some of these Muslims tend to see Muhammad the way average Americans see George 29 Washington or Martin Luther King, Jr. Furthermore, there are openings that exist within the 30 Muslim world, and the Ekklesia is penetrating it through these windows. These openings 31 include more than 90 verses in the Qur’an that talk about Jesus, Mary and Christians.
32 Another window is Sufism. Still another major opening is their fear of death, the demonic 33 and the Day of Judgment.

¹⁴ <http://features.pewforum.org/muslim-population-graphic/#/United%20States>

¹⁶ <http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/middle-east/the-forgotten-massacre-8139930.html>

1 The Muslim world is not only a religion but also a socio/political/religious entity or 2 community. The Muslim world as an entity or community is inclusive of all Muslims in 3 spite of the great diversity among the various Muslim people groups and sects. This large 4 entity includes Sunnis and Shiites as main divisions, which include numerous other divisions 5 such as nominal Muslims, seculars, Sufis, moderate fundamentalists, salafis, radical Muslim 6 fundamentalists, communists, and even atheists. They are all Muslims because they were 7 born into Islam, and Islam offers them a place of belonging. At the same time, the Islamic 8 community is exclusive of all non-Muslims. Their history, which included the Crusades, 9 colonialism, and the history of Israel since 1948, all contribute to the exclusiveness. There 10 are sharp boundaries of who is in and who is out. Some Muslims see Islam as a religion that 11 was only to be practiced at the time of Muhammad and the first hundred years that followed.
12 We can perhaps best understand these Muslims as the alumni of Islam rather than enrolled 13 and dedicated Muslims.
14

2. The Contrast Between the Two Entities

15
16 In my book The Crescent Through The Eyes of The Cross, I addressed the contrast between 17 the two entities of Christendom and the Muslim world.¹⁷ Here is a vivid illustration of how 18 these differences influence how conversions are perceived, how discipleship take place and 19 how church planting gets colored by the interaction of those two entities. I witnessed the 20 interaction closely in Lebanon and in Egypt as I lived among Muslims for fifty years. In my 21 book I present, in the form of a parable, a fictional situation in which I portray a composite 22 of real people I knew.¹⁸ Imagine me being an Egyptian Christian, a true believer living in 23 Cairo, Egypt. Every Thursday evening, I go to a Presbyterian church in downtown Cairo to 24 attend the meeting for working men and women. Because I was discriminated against during 25 my university days, I have a certain prejudice against Muslims. In Egyptian newspapers, 26 there are often articles written by Muslims attacking Christianity and the Bible. Furthermore, 27 the Muslim equivalent of TV evangelists keep insulting Christianity.
28

29 The other character in this parable has the name Mustafa. He is also a composite of many 30 MBBs¹⁹ whom I knew intimately from various parts of the Muslim world. Since there were 31 no interviews of MBBs cited in the Committee Report, this parable serves to illustrate what 32 happens when people are converted from the Muslim world to Christendom.
33

34 Life is easy in the abstract, but we live in a broken world. Here is how I describe the scene:²⁰

¹⁷ Jabbour, Nabeel. The Crescent Through the Eyes of the Cross. Navpress, 2008, pp. 230–232.

¹⁸ Because of time and space limitations, the Committee Report did not interview Muslim background believers in Christ on the ground. This parable attempts to illustrate what is lacking in the Committee Report.

¹⁹ Muslim Background Believers in Christ

²⁰ Jabbour, Nabeel. The Crescent Through the Eyes of the Cross. Navpress, 2008. Pages 230–232.

1 On a certain Thursday, I go to our weekly meeting at church. My friends tell 2 me that we have a guest speaker tonight, a Muslim who has become a Christian.
3 My response to the news is a mixture of pleasure and suspicion. Is he a 4 genuine Christian, or is he playing a role in order to deceive us? When he enters 5 the church, he automatically repulses me as I notice that he has a bruise on his 6 forehead, a hypocritical manifestation of a fake spirituality. Fanatical Muslims 7 with the zibeeba (a bruise on the forehead) attempt to communicate the message 8 that they have prayed so many times, kneeling and touching the carpet with 9 their foreheads, that they got that bruise. Another thing that repulses me is the 10 way he greets me. He says, “Assalamu alaykum” (peace to you). Only Muslims 11 use that terminology when they greet one another. Perhaps he is not a true 12 Christian. Something that repulses me even more is his name. How could he 13 come to our church with the Muslim name Mustafa? Mustafa means “the 14 chosen one” and is one of the names of their prophet Muhammad because they 15 believe that he was chosen by God. I wonder what kind of meeting we will be 16 having tonight.

17
18 After the singing and the prayers, this man is introduced as a former Muslim 19 who has become a Christian. I sit there wondering whether my friends who 20 invited him were duped and trusted him prematurely. I need him to convince 21 me that he has become a “real and true Christian,” just like me, and I am not 22 an easy person to convince.

23
24 When he starts sharing his story, I, like most of those in the church meeting, 25 quietly listen to him to find out whether he is genuine. As he warms up and 26 starts attacking Islam and ridiculing Muhammad and the Muslim faith, I start 27 enjoying his story. From our laughter at his jokes about Islam and our agreeing 28 with him about his attacks, he finds out how to win our approval. By the time 29 he finishes, we are all elated and encouraged by his sharing, although we wish 30 he were more polished like us and used our Christian terminology. But we 31 know we need to be patient because this polish will come with time and 32 practice. After the meeting, I, along with others, thank him for his sharing and 33 congratulate him on his conversion. As people come and thank him, he feels 34 as though he has finally found his place of belongingness in our church meeting 35 because he is being treated like a hero with a halo around his head.

36
37 I still do not like the zibeeba, the bruise on his forehead. I hope that in the 38 future he will put cream on it in order to cover it up. During the informal time 39 at the end of the meeting, I follow him with the corner of my eye and notice at 40 one point that he is talking to my younger sister and to other women. When I 41 see him doing that, I begin to wonder about his motives. Is he coming after the 42 women? Why would a Muslim want to believe in Christ other than for women, 43 money, or a desire to go to America? So back at home, I warn my sister and 44 advise her not to get too excited just yet that he has become a true believer.

1 We will need to wait and see “fruit” before we trust him. I even quote to her a 2 litmus test: “By their fruit you recognize them” (Matthew 7:20).

3
4 When Mustafa returns the following Thursday to our church meeting, not as 5 the speaker but as an ordinary person, he finds that most of us respond to him 6 with plastic, artificial smiles. We keep him away at a safe distance because he 7 still greets us by saying “Assalamu alaykum,” and he still “smells” like a
8 Muslim. It seems I was not the only one from our church who preached to a 9 family member a little sermon about the need to avoid Mustafa until we see 10 fruit! So Mustafa starts wondering whether he has come to the right church.
11 Very soon he meets another Protestant Christian in Cairo, who invites him to 12 his church. The halo returns temporarily but does not last long. Then he gets 13 invited to another church and another, and in the meantime he learns how to 14 please the Christians: by making fun of Islam and by attacking Muhammad 15 and the Qur’an.

16
17 As the months pass, he begins to get more polished in his terminology. At the 18 same time, he ruptures every relationship he had with his Muslim family and 19 friends as he becomes openly critical of Islam. He even changes his name 20 from Mustafa to Peter and gets baptized. Shortly afterward, he comes to our 21 Thursday meeting again, this time to give a testimony of how he is suffering 22 for Christ. He is not Mustafa anymore, but brother Peter. I never felt at ease 23 by calling him “brother Mustafa.” Brother and Mustafa did not mesh. He no 24 longer uses the Muslim terminology he used to, and he lifts up his arms in 25 church during the singing and shouts, “Hallelujah” and “Praise the Lord.”
26 Now he has really become one of us; he is inside our “fortress with thick 27 walls” that protects us from the Muslims outside.”

28
29 These two composites sadly describe how national Christians in Muslims countries, 30 especially in the Middle East, have treated MBBs²¹ over the centuries. These are not 31 unique phenomena but a sad reality in many Muslim countries around the world. Many 32 stories like these could be told.

33
34 Does the Bible teach that Muslims, upon believing in Christ, should rupture their 35 relationships with their Muslim families and friends and put on our Christendom culture 36 as the parable portrays? What does the Bible require of them?

37 38 3. Doctrine vs. Missiology

39 What does it mean to be both strongly Reformed and strongly missiological? The Bible 40 shows both the importance of sound doctrine and the importance of spreading the gospel. So 41 the two belong together, and they should deepen one another. The famous passage in ²¹ Muslim Background Believers in Christ.

1 Matthew 28:18–20 is clearly about spreading the gospel, but also speaks of “teaching them 2 to observe all that I have commanded you” (verse 20). This teaching includes what Matthew 3 specifically records about Jesus’ teaching earlier in the Gospel of Matthew. But in addition, 4 since Jesus commissioned the apostles and men like Luke to write the New Testament, it 5 includes by implication all the teaching of the New Testament; it includes rich doctrine.
 6 Conversely, the doctrine is designed by God to nourish His people, and His plan is that more 7 people will continue to be added. So the doctrine is for the discipling of the nations, not just 8 for those who are already firmly established believers. Doctrine promotes evangelization, 9 and evangelization includes discipleship and doctrinal teaching.

10

11 These two sides, doctrine on the one hand and propagation of the gospel and growth of the 12 church on the other, go together. Yet in practice tension can arise, because these two areas 13 are associated with different interests and different gifts within the body of Christ. Many 14 Reformed people tend to think first of protecting the doctrine and therefore get nervous 15 about contextualization. But contextualization should be understood as seeking ways of 16 explaining the gospel that make most sense and that appeal most vividly to a particular 17 culture. Of course, contextualization can go awry and lead to syncretism and the dilution of 18 doctrine. But it also needs to be understood that all doctrine is formulated and understood in 19 a context. Furthermore, God Himself came to be with us as a contextualized human being.
 20 The gospel will likewise necessarily come to concrete expression and be understood in 21 particular contexts. This inevitability of contextualization should eliminate broad fears and 22 worries and produce a focused study of various contexts and of the way the gospel is 23 enhanced or compromised in various efforts at contextualization.

24

25 People who are strong on doctrine can also be nervous about church forms that outwardly 26 differ from what they are used to. For example, among the Quechua Indians in South 27 America, the preaching of the Word takes the form of alternation between the preacher 28 speaking and the people turning and explaining things to one another, because that 29 alternation is normal in their culture. But it looks weird to someone who grows up thinking 30 that a monologue sermon is the only possible way to communicate the Word in conformity 31 with scriptural principles. When a group of Korean Christians pray, they will often all pray 32 out loud simultaneously, which looks weird to an American. People who are strong on 33 doctrine also may be nervous about the gradual leavening of culture. They compare the 34 beginnings of the gospel in people’s lives with the endpoint, and they may turn up their 35 noses at the fact that they don’t see enough change in a culture to satisfy them. The starting 36 point for the leavening is not tidy. That is, the starting point in a culture without previous 37 contact with the gospel is likely to have many ideas and practices contaminated with 38 idolatry. And when people first come to Christ they do not immediately experience the 39 sanctification of a person who has been heavily trained and sanctified for forty years. It may 40 therefore seem to the fastidious that the only way for their converts to be sanctified is to

1 have them “appear” to be sanctified in outward form by adopting Western culture as a 2 whole. But that is superficial and unbiblical, just as it is superficial and unbiblical to ask 3 Gentiles to be circumcised in order to be sanctified out of their former paganism.
4

5 Conversely, missiologists tend to think first of all of getting the message out and starting a 6 movement, and some can easily be pragmatic and minimize doctrine. Yet for them as well as 7 the doctrinally focused people, the pastoral answer is the same: Focus on the direction in 8 which believers are growing. Be patient. Work together toward maturity, learning together 9 how best to express biblical instruction in each linguistic and cultural context. At the same 10 time, work patiently and lovingly with small, hesitating, and confused beginnings. Don’t 11 leave them merely where they are, pronouncing that they have become believers and so we 12 are through. But being willing to work with and pray for those who are just beginning on a 13 path toward maturity.
14

15 Reformed missiology of the richest kind, such as was represented in the last century by 16 Johan Bavinck, penetrated to see the profundities of change involved in a mission that 17 encompasses all nations. Such missiology affirms both the richness of doctrine and the 18 cultural adaptability of missiology; in fact, they are two sides of the same coin. Doctrinal 19 depth recognizes the superficiality of circumcision and Westernization and the power of the 20 gospel to penetrate the most powerful of idolatries, including sex, money, and power. On 21 doctrinal grounds—such as the universality of the gospel, the universality of the reign of 22 Christ, the universality of sin, and the universality of the image of God—it champions a rich 23 contextualization, recognizing that doctrinal depth is always contextual. It understands that 24 sanctification can be painfully gradual (leaven). So it does not rest after people first come to 25 faith. Neither does it insist on complete sanctification and Western, philosophically refined 26 doctrinal formulations when people first become believers. In fact, doctrinal depth 27 encourages fresh understandings of the Scriptures and theology in light of the current 28 context.²²

29 4. How to Live “in” an Ungodly Culture Without Being “of” It

30 The entire epistle of 1 Corinthians addresses the practicalities of what it takes to live a holy 31 life in an unholy culture—how to be “in” that culture without being “of” it. The city of 32 Corinth was known for being particularly immoral and given to pagan idolatry and 33 philosophies. Paul addressed the Corinthian believers as saints or holy ones and taught them

²² Some readers distinguish between Insider Movement (IM) proponents and disagree with them yet agree with those who practice contextualization. In this Report we look at the diversity that exists within the Insider Movements, including contextualization. We will disagree with what is wrong, and we encourage what is balanced and biblical.

1 how to live in light of their new identity as holy ones in Christ: “To the church of God which 2 is in Corinth, to those who have been sanctified in Christ Jesus, saints by calling.”²³

3
4 This is, of course, very relevant for Muslims who are trying to follow Christ in the midst of 5 the Muslim world. It is equally relevant for Americans trying to follow Christ in the midst of 6 a materialistic culture. The Corinthians happened to live in a pagan culture in which they 7 were facing these issues:

- 8
- 9 • Demonstrating the wisdom of the Spirit in a culture that venerated sophistry 10 (chapters 1–3)
- 11 • Following servant-leadership in a culture that loved and worshipped wisdom 12 and power (chapter 4)
- 13 • Living sexually pure lives in a culture that embraced gross sexual immorality 14 (chapters 5, 6)
- 15 • Handling conflicts in a godly way in a culture that loved to take things to 16 court (chapter 6)
- 17 • Preserving family relationships in a culture where families were broken 18 (chapter 7)
- 19 • Maintaining social interactions in a culture where everything was laced with 20 idolatry (chapter 8)
- 21 • Using freedom to serve in a culture that regarded freedom as a license to sin 22 (chapter 9)
- 23 • Avoiding the temptations of idolatry in a culture where idolatry was 24 normative (chapter 10)
- 25 • Learning to worship in a godly way in a culture where worship was an 26 opportunity for self-indulgence (chapter 11)
- 27 • Using one’s gifts to serve in a culture where one’s strengths were used to 28 serve oneself (chapters 12–14)
- 29 • Living based on the resurrection in a culture where the resurrection was 30 regarded as foolishness (chapter 15)

31 Thus, 1 Corinthians 7 is one of many chapters that addresses the costs and practicalities of 32 remaining in a pagan culture and living a holy life there. That theme is highlighted in verses 33 like these:

34
35 1 Corinthians 5:9–10: “I wrote you in my letter not to associate with immoral 36 people; I did not at all mean with the immoral people of this world, or with the ²³ 1 Corinthians 1:2. See also 1 Corinthians 6:1-2; 14:33; 16:1, 15; 2 Corinthians 1:1; 8:4; 9:1, 12; and 13:13.

1 covetous and swindlers, or with idolaters, for then you would have to go out 2 of the world.”

3 1 Corinthians 6:12: “All things are lawful for me, but not all things are 4 profitable. All things are lawful for me, but I will not be mastered by 5 anything.”

6 1 Corinthians 9:19–23: “For though I am free from all men, I have made 7 myself a slave to all, so that I may win more. To the Jews I became as a Jew, 8 so that I might win Jews; to those who are under the Law, as under the Law 9 though not being myself under the Law, so that I might win those who are 10 under the Law; to those who are without law, as without law, though not being 11 without the law of God but under the law of Christ, so that I might win those 12 who are without law. To the weak I became weak, that I might win the weak; I 13 have become all things to all men, so that I may by all means save some. I do 14 all things for the sake of the gospel, so that I may become a fellow partaker 15 of it.”

16 1 Corinthians 10:23: “All things are lawful, but not all things are profitable.
17 All things are lawful, but not all things edify.”

18 1 Corinthians 10:31–32: “Whether, then, you eat or drink or whatever you do, 19 do all to the glory of God. Give no offense either to Jews or to Greeks or to 20 the church of God.”

21
22 In these key texts, there is a great deal of room for liberty and for the role of the conscience 23 as the WCF states.²⁴ Insiders can find comfort and affirmation in the freedom that the Bible 24 provides for them as they live as saints within their corrupt context.

25
26 The controversial text at hand, 1 Corinthians 7:17–24, is unique. It transcends the chapter 27 because it has broader application.²⁵ Paul laid down a rule that applied not only to the 28 immediate context of this chapter and the broader context of 1 Corinthians chapters 5–10, 29 but also to the rest of the letters he wrote. It applied to all the churches: “This is the rule I lay 30 down in all the churches” (verse 17). This text should also be seen in its biographical context 31 of the patterned lifestyle of Paul as the author. I will address the immediate context of 32 1 Corinthians 7 shortly, but I would like to start by addressing those other contexts with more 33 specificity.

34
35 In 1 Corinthians 5, Paul writes to the church on how to deal with and relate to an unrepentant 36 brother who committed adultery. In 1 Corinthians 5:9–11, he says:

37
38 I have written you in my letter not to associate with sexually immoral people 39 not at all meaning the people of this world who are immoral, or the greedy and

²⁴ WCF 20.2 “God alone is the Lord of the conscience...Requiring implicit of absolute obedience also destroys freedom of conscience as well as the free use of reason.”

²⁵ 1 Corinthians 7:17: “Nevertheless, each one should retain the place in life that the Lord assigned to him and to which God has called him. This is the rule I lay down in all the churches”

1 swindlers, or idolaters. In that case you would have to leave this world. But 2 now I am writing you that you must not associate with anyone who calls 3 himself a brother but is sexually immoral or greedy, an idolater or a slanderer, 4 a drunkard or a swindler. With such a man do not even eat.
 5

6 He is basically teaching these Christians how to be in the world and yet not of the world.
 7 They need to associate with unbelievers and be in the world so that they can win them to 8 Christ. They should not associate with unrepentant believers as a form of discipline, so that 9 those unrepentant believers will repent and turn back to God. In chapter 6 Paul deals with 10 lawsuits among brothers and points to how shameful it is to become so worldly. Those 11 Corinthians were in the world and became like the world. They lost their distinctiveness as 12 God’s people, and as a result, their testimony to the unbelievers suffered. He passionately 13 stirred them to flee sexual immorality and to live in purity.
 14

15 In 1 Corinthians 8, Paul addresses the issue of how God’s children can live well together 16 even when they disagree about their convictions over whether to eat or not eat meat sacrificed 17 to idols. There were those in the church, the stronger brothers, who did not have a problem 18 with purchasing at a more reasonable price meat sacrificed to idols. They wanted to enjoy 19 God’s given freedom. There were others who came from a Jewish background, adhering to 20 the law of Moses, who were being caused to stumble by the freedom of others. Paul warns 21 the stronger Christians in verse 9 that they have the right to live in freedom, yet: “Be careful, 22 however that the exercise of your freedom does not become a stumbling block to the weak.”
 23 As for himself, Paul asserts in verse 13 that: “If what I eat causes my brother to fall into sin, 24 I will never eat meat again, so that I will not cause him to fall.” Unity of heart, in spite of the 25 diversity in convictions in the body of Christ, was of great importance to Paul—even at the 26 high cost of becoming a vegetarian for the sake of the weaker brother. This love for one 27 another in the body of Christ is a testimony to the world that the gospel has the power to 28 transform lives. Paul did not say to the stronger brothers that they were wrong.²⁶ He agreed 29 with them that they have the truth but asked them to extend grace and love to the weaker 30 brothers.

31 Paul continues in chapter 9 with how he gave up so many of his rights for the sake of the 32 expansion of the gospel. In this chapter, we see not only a broader context for 1 Corinthians 33 7:17–24 but also the biographical context; we see Paul’s heart and driving passion. He 34 points out to those Corinthians that he is serving them free of charge because he is driven 35 with a passion to preach the gospel and not do only what he is paid to do. In verse 18, he 36 says: “Though I am free and belong to no man, I make myself a slave to everyone to win as 37 many as possible.”²⁷ The expansion of the gospel was Paul’s passion. He was willing to

²⁶ 1 Corinthians 8:4–6

²⁷ 1 Corinthians 9:19

1 make every sacrifice to win as many as possible. To the Jew he became like a Jew to win
2 Jews. To those who had no law he became like one not having the law so as to win those not 3 having the law. To the weak he became weak to win the weak. He became all things to all 4 men so that by all possible means he might save some. His commitment to the expansion of 5 the gospel brought to his mind the discipline that an Olympian needs to be a winner for a 6 fading crown. Paul saw himself in a much more important race that would result in a crown 7 that lasts forever.

8 9 In chapter 10, Paul continues to give instructions to the Corinthians on how to be in the 10 world yet not of the world. He reminds them to learn from Israel’s history about the dangers 11 of idolatry. Even though God’s people were under the cloud, passed through the sea and 12 drank from the spiritual rock that accompanied them, God still was not pleased with most of 13 them. Therefore Paul warns the Corinthians not to become overconfident or arrogant and 14 end up arousing God’s anger by drinking of the cup of the Lord and at the same time the cup 15 of demons. Paul then closes that section about how to be in the world and not of the world 16 by addressing freedom, concluding that “Everything is permissible—but not everything is 17 beneficial. Everything is permissible—but not everything is constructive... Whatever you eat 18 or drink or whatever you do, do it all for the glory of God” (verses 23, 31).

19
20 The text often questioned is 1 Corinthians 7:17–24.²⁸ The immediate context of this passage 21 is 1 Corinthians 7, which addresses the topic of marriage. We might wonder how a chapter 22 on marriage relates to questions about Insider Movements, but Paul himself applies this 23 principle beyond the immediate issue of marriage. Looking at the text in its immediate 24 context, its broader context, and in its biographical context all demonstrate that 25 1 Corinthians 7:17–24 transcends the chapter and the letter and speaks not only to the issue 26 of marriage but very definitely to current issues of the time such as the Gentile/Jew and 27 slavery or status in society.

28 29 The Immediate Context

30
31 Paul starts 1 Corinthians 7 by addressing the value of remaining single. At times he sounds 32 very gentle and not forceful at all in his opinions: “I say this as a concession, not as a

²⁸ “Nevertheless, each one should retain the place in life that the Lord assigned to him and to which God has called him. This is the rule I lay down in all the churches. 18 Was a man already circumcised when he was called? He should not become uncircumcised. Was a man uncircumcised when he was called? He should not be circumcised. 19 Circumcision is nothing and uncircumcision is nothing. Keeping God's commands is what counts. Each one should remain in the situation which he was in when God called him. 21 Were you a slave when you were called? Don't let it trouble you—although if you can gain your freedom, do so. 22 For he who was a slave when he was called by the Lord is the Lord's freedman; similarly, he who was a free man when he was called is Christ's slave. 23 You were bought at a price; do not become slaves of men.:24 Brothers, each man, as responsible to God, should remain in the situation God called him to.”

1 command.”²⁹ As Paul continues to address issues related to marriage, he comes to a sticky 2 problem. What if a woman comes to faith in Christ and her husband is not a believer: should 3 she divorce him? He answers by saying:

4
 5 If a woman has a husband who is not a believer and he is willing to live with 6 her, she must not divorce him.

7 8 Then Paul goes on to give his reasoning:

9 10 For the unbelieving husband has been sanctified through his wife, and the 11 unbelieving wife has been sanctified through her believing husband.
 12 Otherwise your children would be unclean, but as it is, they are holy.

13
 14 A helpful cross reference to this text is 1 Peter 3:1–6, which I will address shortly. Then Paul 15 goes on to say:

16
 17 “But if the unbeliever leaves, let him do so. A believing man or woman is not 18 bound in such circumstances; God has called us to live in peace. How do you 19 know, wife, whether you will save your husband? Or, how do you know, 20 husband, whether you will save your wife?”³⁰

21
 22 It seems that what was on Paul’s mind was for the believing partner to remain in the marriage 23 in the hope that the other partner would come to know Christ. He was also concerned with 24 the impact on the children of a believing and unbelieving spouse. This goes with his passion 25 to see the gospel penetrating families and not only transforming individuals. To give his 26 argument more power, Paul resorted to one of his theological “nuggets” that fits, not only 27 this chapter and letter, but with other chapters in other letters. The theological nugget is 28 1 Corinthians 7:17–24. Once Paul dealt with this issue, he carried on in the rest of that 29 chapter and dealt with family life issues and the need to live in light of the brevity of time 30 and the expansion of the gospel.

31
 32 First Peter 3:1–6 is a very helpful cross reference because it talks about a wife who is a true 33 believer while the husband is either not a believer or a mediocre believer.³¹ Peter started out 34 by defining the situation of the believing wife with her mediocre husband and suggested that 35 she should submit to him in order to win him to Christ through the beauty of her life.
 36 Submission is not subservience. Submission implies being aware of God and His dealings in 37 our lives. Being preoccupied with the person we are submitting to, rather than being aware

²⁹ 1 Corinthians 7:6

³⁰ 1 Corinthians 7:13–16

³¹ 1 Peter 3:1: “Wives, in the same way be submissive to your husbands so that, if any of them do not believe the word, they may be won over without words by the behavior of their wives.”

1 of God, can result either in subservience or in rebellion. Submission does not negate tough 2 love. Both Peter and Paul say to a believing spouse, as much as possible, try to stay married 3 to the unbelieving partner and seek to win him/her to Christ. Then Paul addresses 4 1 Corinthians 7:17–24.

5 6 1 Corinthians 7:17–24 In Its Fuller Context

7
 8 [17] Nevertheless, each one should retain the place in life that the Lord
 9 assigned to him and to which God has called him. This is the rule I lay down 10 in all the churches. [18] Was a man already circumcised when he was called?
 11 He should not become uncircumcised. Was a man uncircumcised when he was 12 called? He should not be circumcised. [19] Circumcision is nothing and 13 uncircumcision is nothing. Keeping God’s commands is what counts. [20] 14 Each one should remain in the situation which he was in when God called 15 him. [21] Were you a slave when you were called? Don’t let it trouble you—
 16 although if you can gain your freedom, do so. [22] For he who was a slave 17 when he was called by the Lord is the Lord’s freedman; similarly, he who was 18 a free man when he was called is Christ’s slave. [23] You were bought at a 19 price; do not become slaves of men. [24] Brothers, each man, as responsible to 20 God, should remain in the situation God called him to.

21
 22 In verse 17, Paul starts very forcefully. He is no more gently suggesting: “I say this as a 23 concession, not as a command,” as he did in verse 6. In verse 17, he says that remaining in the 24 condition and situation which a person was in when God called him or her is an assignment 25 by God and a calling from Him. To put it another way, if one refuses to remain in the 26 situation he was in when God called him, he is risking abandoning God’s assignment and 27 calling. Then Paul says that retaining that place in life is a principle that he teaches and lays 28 down in all the churches. Actually, he repeats this principle of remaining in context or 29 retaining that place in life three times in this short text, in verses 17, 20 and 24. This is the 30 principle he lays down in all the churches; the repetition of this principle is strong evidence 31 that this text, 1 Corinthians 7:17–24, has a certain uniqueness. It looks like Paul taught this 32 principle in all the churches and could have included this text in the letter to the Ephesians 33 or Colossians. Instead, the Holy Spirit directed him to include it in the chapter on marriage 34 in 1 Corinthians 7, because of the issue that was raised in 1 Corinthians 7:12–14 dealing with 35 marriage.

36
 37 Paul then goes into two areas of life, in addition to marriage, where this principle applies. It 38 applied to the Jew-Gentile controversy and to the issue of status in society. To the Jews who 39 have become believers in Christ, he says not to become Gentile Christians as we see in 40 Ephesians 2:11–20. To the Gentile Christians, he says not to get circumcised and become 41 Jewish Christians. Being Jewish or being Gentile is nothing. What counts is surrender to 1 Christ and retaining one’s own situation for the sake of the gospel. In the diagram below, we 2 see that what really matters is not whether the person is a Jew or a Gentile—or, as it were, a 3 “square” or a “circle” as shown in the diagram. What really matters is that the person is in 4 the inner circle, the Ekklesia, where there is no dividing wall (Ephesians 2:14–15). There is 5 a dividing wall between Jews and Gentiles who have two distinct colors but not in the inner 6 circle, the Ekklesia. Inside the inner circle the colors are pale in contrast to the outer circle.

 7

8

9

Inner Circle is the Ekklesia

10 At the time of Paul, there were two categories of people: Jews and non-Jews or Gentiles.
 11 (The word Gentiles merely meant non-Jews). We cannot do an identical comparison of 12 believing Jew-Gentile with believers within Christendom and the Muslim World, but in 13 general there are similarities that make for useful comparison. Jews in New Testament times 14 held various theological positions, some orthodox and some heterodox. Some were upright 15 under the Law, others lived in violation of the Law. “Gentiles” referred to vastly diverse 16 individuals and groups. Among both groups Jesus movements developed, and Jewishness 17 and Gentileness were not abandoned. They were now theological concepts that didn’t 18 “count,” like male and female, but still real distinctions, like male and female.

19

20 This is very similar to the situation, for instance, in Egypt today. Everyone in Egypt belongs 21 either to Christendom or to the Muslim world. Even legally on an identity card, one must 22 identify himself as either a Muslim or a Christian. There are no other options. Unlike in 23 America where we have a variety of options, Egypt has only two. There might be a secular 24 Muslim named Muhammad who is an atheist. He still belongs to the Muslim world because 25 he was born into Islam. The Muslim world is his birth community. In the same way, 26 whoever is born into Christendom, the minority Christian community, is called Christian.
 27 That does not mean this person holds orthodox Christian beliefs. He is “Christian” because 28 that is his birth identity. In the same way, a person may have the birth-identity of “Muslim” 29 and yet not hold orthodox Muslim beliefs. This reality is often ignored in writings on Islam, 30 which tend to focus on theological concepts rather than social realities. Often when 31 someone turns to Christ, the Muslim family is more concerned about “conversion” to the 1 often-unbiblical Christian community (Christendom) than they are about any change of 2 theology focused on Jesus Christ.

3
4 Try this experiment as you read Ephesians 2. Replace the words believers within the Muslim 5 World for Gentiles and believers within Christendom for Jews, and read it in the context of 6 reaching out to Muslims with the gospel. Note some principles that emerge. You might find 7 that all of a sudden the New Testament has a greater relevance to your context, as seen in the 8 diagram below.

9

10

11 Inner Circle is the Ekklesia

12 In the same church building in a certain city in America, there could be two congregations 13 using the same facility, a congregation of Caucasians and a congregation of Korean 14 believers. The Koreans and the Caucasians are brothers and sisters in the Lord, and they 15 both belong to the inner circle of the Ekklesia, but somehow bringing the two congregations 16 together every Sunday might not be helpful. Koreans prefer to listen to the sermon preached 17 in the Korean language. They like to eat their own food after the church service and enjoy 18 their distinct culture. That is why, in this diagram, the circles and squares stay separate at 19 times. There can be unity in spite of diversity.³² Uniformity is not essential for unity. The 20 Koreans and the Caucasians should maintain unity and fellowship by meeting together and 21 praying for one another even if the two congregations do not meet together for worship.

22

23 Muslims do not have to change their “circular” shape—their first-birth identity and legal 24 status—by becoming “square shaped” in order to enter the Ekklesia. Muslims can enter 25 directly into the Ekklesia without having to put on Christendom culture and become, as it 26 were, “square shaped.” Cornelius, who was “circular,” did not need to become a Jewish 27 “square” to enter the Ekklesia. Jew and Gentile are not an identical parallel to Christendom 28 and the Muslim world, but there are certainly lessons to learn here. Truly, the unique role ³² At a leadership level there was unity among the Gentile churches with the Jerusalem church as seen in Galatians 2:1–5.

1 that Old Covenant Israel played in redemptive history gives unique features to the Jew-2 Gentile frontier described in the New Testament scriptures. But the sociological dynamics of 3 following Jesus for Jews and for Gentiles in New Testament times certainly parallels the 4 sociological dynamics in Islamic societies and communities today. Jews and Gentiles joined 5 a new reality of “church” without ceasing to be Jew and Gentile. Members of Christendom 6 in Egypt join “church” while still being members of Christendom. Is it really necessary for 7 members of the Muslim world to renounce that birth community and social identity when 8 they come to Christ? This is the fundamental question of the Insider Movements discussion, 9 and members of the Muslim world have concluded that they do not need to renounce their 10 birth community and social identity; they do not see a biblical imperative for such an act.
 11 Their core identity in Christ should never be compromised.

12

13 First Corinthians 7:17–24 addresses a third issue which must have been a burning one in his 14 day, namely, the issue of status in society, which appeared in those days in the form of 15 slavery. Today status in society has relevance to employment, citizenship, race and social 16 class. What Paul was addressing in his context was this: What if a slave comes to know 17 Christ and his owner is a believer in Christ as well?³³ Should the Christian slave demand his 18 liberation? How does Paul address this issue? He tells the Christian slave, starting with 19 verse 21,

20

21 Were you a slave when you were called? Don’t let it trouble you—although if 22 you can gain your freedom, do so. [22] For he who was a slave when he was 23 called by the Lord is the Lord’s freedman; similarly, he who was a free man 24 when he was called is Christ’s slave. [23] You were bought at a price; do not 25 become slaves of men.

26 Paul is saying to the Christian slave that if he can gain his freedom, it will be great. But if he 27 cannot, he should not indulge in self-pity, resenting his boss who is his owner. Paul reminds 28 him that although he is a slave, he is a free man on the inside. Paul motivates him to focus 29 on the freedom that he already possesses. Then he reminds him that the boss who owns him 30 is, after all, a slave of Christ. In other words, we live in an unjust and broken world, but as 31 we stand before Christ, the ground is level. So he tells this slave, repeating the same 32 principle for the third time, to retain the place in life that the Lord assigned to him and to 33 which God has called him, and thus to embrace his circumstances rather than resent them.
 34 Real inner freedom is not shaped by circumstances but in being able to choose the right 35 attitude in the midst of those circumstances.³⁴ This basic principle is applicable not only to 36 marriage and to the Jew/Gentile issues but also to one’s status in society. Of course there

³³ Letter to Philemon

³⁴ 1Thessalonians 5:18

1 followers of Christ are immersed in that atmosphere. It is a difficult challenge to be in the 2 world but at the same time be protected from the evil one. Training in spiritual warfare and 3 putting on the full armor of God is essential.³⁶ Let us keep in mind that the same could be 4 said about some branches of Christendom that hold people in bondage, seeking to prevent 5 them the freedom to put their faith in Christ. That also is an evil structure of power.

6

6. Diversity Within Christendom and Within the Muslim World

8 Christendom and the Muslim world can be represented on this PQRS diagram.

12 13 The large rectangle (P & Q) on the left represents Christendom. The majority of those 14 within Christendom do not know the truths contained in the Scriptures nor understand the 15 gospel. They may have a theology of salvation by works, a veneration of Mary, or a legalistic 16 understanding of a relationship with God. Those people who call themselves “Christians” 17 yet do not know God personally are represented in the diagram as Zone P. Genuine 18 Christians who understand the Scriptures and try to live according to their teaching are 19 represented as Zone Q. The size and percentage of Zones P vs. Q vary from one country to 20 another and from time to time. The diagram does not represent percentages.

21
 22 The large rectangle on the right side in the diagram (Zones R & S) represents the Muslim 23 world and includes all types of Muslims, whether they are Folk, Orthodox, Secular, 24 Contented, Ambivalent, Mystics, Fundamentalist, Sunnis, or Shiites. They include high-25 practice and low-practice Muslims.

26
 27 These various types of Muslims are differentiated by their theologies, degrees of 28 commitment and their particular cultures. For the sake of this diagram, the distinguishing 29 mark between Muslims is that fanatical Muslims³⁷ are those in Zone S who adhere to a 30 theology that clearly contradicts the Scriptures, while those who tend to be open-minded 31 Muslims are in Zone R.

32
 33 Muslims in Zone S believe that the Qur’an is superior to the Bible because it contains the 34 final and most accurate revelation. They believe that Muhammad is superior to Christ

³⁶ Ephesians 6:10–18

³⁷ Fundamentalists are driven by theology and degree of commitment, while fanatical Muslims are driven by an attitude of self-righteousness, demonizing all those who disagree with them.

1 because he is the “Seal of the prophets.”³⁸ Muslims in Zone S believe and are committed to 2 the theory of Abrogation in how they interpret the Qur’an. This theory says that later
 3 revelation can abrogate, correct or delete earlier contradictory revelation. (See the Theory 4 of Abrogation in Section 14). Zone S includes fanatical Muslims with theological views that 5 contradict the Scriptures.

10 In contrast, Zone R Muslims tend to believe that God is one, transcendent, the judge, 11 merciful and compassionate, the provider. They believe that Muslims need to care for 12 orphans and widows. They tend to be open-minded and can relate well to adherents of other 13 religions. Some of them look for common ground that exists in Western values, human rights 14 and the Qur’an. They see “Islam” as a society, a social, cultural, and political solidarity 15 rather than as a religious system primarily.

16

17 As stated earlier, these Zone R Muslims are like alumni of Islam who have moved beyond 18 what was instilled in them about Muhammad and the Qur’an. They recognize the parts of 19 the Qur’an that agree with human rights as having universal application, while the parts that 20 talk about militancy, the infidels, bad treatment of women, or slavery as having served their 21 transitional purpose during the time of Muhammad and are no longer applicable. These 22 Muslims tend to think, either consciously or unconsciously, that the earlier, purer revelation 23 associated mainly with the Meccan Suras (611–622 AD) of the Qur’an can and should 24 abrogate contradictory later revelation associated mainly with the Medinan Suras (622–632 25 AD)³⁹ that were literally applicable during the time of Muhammad. These low-practice, 26 pragmatic Muslims reverse abrogation in their daily lives (see section 14) and reject 27 fundamentalism. Some of them even go further and see the Qur’an as an ancient document 28 that has no real binding authority over modern man.

29

30 For example, a missionary in a Muslim country wrote: “Most of my contacts here reverse 31 abrogation in practice.” Most Muslims, whether in Zone R or in Zone S, have a strong 32 sense of solidarity with the entity of “Islam”, which provides them with a place of belonging

³⁸ Surah 33:40: “Seal of the prophets” implies that he is the recipient of the final and most accurate revelation.
<http://www.examiner.com/article/muhammad-saw-seal-of-the-prophets>

³⁹ Muslims believe that Muhammad received revelation in the city of Mecca from 611 to 622. He moved to the city of Medina in 622, and that became the turning point in the Muslim calendar. Muslims also believe that he received revelation while in the city of Medina from 622 until his death in 632. The Meccan and Medinan Suras (sections or chapters) are the contents of the Qur’an.

1 in their communities and in the Muslim world. This place of belonging serves as their defense 2 against Western influences, such as gay marriage. Turning against the Muslim identity and 3 their own people would be like an American who turns against or burns the American flag.
 4

5 The type of Muslims that Jay Smith⁴⁰ encounters at the Speaker’s Corner⁴¹ at Hyde Park in 6 London are mostly from Zone S, while the Muslims who are Carl Medearis’⁴² friends, 7 clearly are from Zone R. Here is a message from one of Carl Medearis’ Muslim friends who 8 is from Zone R:
 9

10 Last July I was approached by old colleagues to run for the position of 11 president of a 40-year-old academic organization. I have just been informed 12 that I was elected as president by its members along with a new Board. I 13 intend to use my position on the Board to push for reconciliation and to 14 encourage Muslims to learn more about Jesus, whom I know and love, while 15 encouraging Christians to learn more about the Qur’an and their Muslim 16 neighbors. I feel that I was called to serve in this position, and with your help I 17 will do my best to be a peacemaker. I will keep you informed, and I will need 18 your prayers.
 19

20 Please remember that this man is a Muslim. He is not one of the 13% of high-practice 21 Muslims but belongs to the majority, the 87% of low-practice Muslims who see themselves 22 as alumni of Islam.⁴³
 23

24 7. Mentoring on How to Handle Freedom

25 Muslims in Zone R who are on a journey toward Christ might have one of two callings, 26 both of which are biblical options: 1) Surrender fully to Christ and get integrated into 27 Christendom, moving into Zone Q, or 2) Surrender fully to Christ and remain in Zone R as 28 salt and light among their own people in their birth communities.⁴⁴

⁴³ Low-practice Muslims might fast some days in Ramadan with family and celebrate Muslim holidays. They will not go to the local mosques on Fridays, nor are they performing the daily prayers.

⁴⁴ Matthew 5:14–16

1 How legitimate is each of these callings and desires?⁴⁵ To what extent should Christian 2 evangelists and mentors, on the one hand, foster their Muslim friends’ freedom to make their 3 own decisions as they study the Scriptures while following the leading of the Holy Spirit and 4 their consciences⁴⁶ or, on the other hand, steer them consciously or unconsciously either to 5 Zone R or to Zone Q?⁴⁷ The latter choice, in which the convert is steered either to Zone R 6 or to Zone Q is not the best option. When the mentor proactively encourages Muslims to 7 leave their families and social networks as part of following Christ, the mentor runs the 8 severe risk of taking the place of the Holy Spirit. He seems to be violating the principle that 9 Paul established in 1 Corinthians 7. Instead, mentors need to teach and train MBBs,⁴⁸ both 10 those who convert to Christendom and those who remain in their birth community, how to 11 handle freedom as they grow into mature disciples of Jesus Christ with the tools to think 12 clearly and to understand the Scriptures.

8. Options for Jews Who Follow Jesus

14 The same issues arise in ministry to Jews. Can a Jew be fully surrendered to Jesus Christ and 15 remain an insider within the Jewish culture? In other words, can a Jew be fully surrendered 16 to Jesus Christ and call himself a Messianic Jew? Our immediate reaction to this question 17 may be to assert that Judaism and Islam are fundamentally different, and they are 18 fundamentally different. But there are important lessons to be learned by taking a closer look 19 at significant parallels between the two. Judaism is explicitly the cradle of Christianity, 20 whereas Islam claims to supersede and correct Christianity. But it is not as simple as that.
 21 This diagram might be helpful.

28 Zone Q is our comfort zone as Evangelicals. In the large rectangle on the right, there are 29 two zones, R and S. The Jews in Zone R tend to be open minded and not prejudiced against ⁴⁵ The legitimacy of remaining in context is dealt with in section 4 on 1 Corinthians 7:17–24.

⁴⁶ WCF 20.2, 31.2

⁴⁷ WCF 20.2 “II. God alone is Lord of the conscience, and hath left it free from the doctrines and commandments of men which are in anything contrary to his Word, or beside it in matters of faith or worship. So that to believe such doctrines, or to obey such commandments out of conscience, is to betray true liberty of conscience; and the requiring an implicit faith, and an absolute and blind obedience, is to destroy liberty of conscience, and reason also.”

⁴⁸ Muslim background believers in Christ

1 Jesus. Messianic Jews⁴⁹ who are fully surrendered to Christ remain in Zone R like yeast in 2 the dough. Messianic Jews reject the Talmud and the rabbinic teachings about Christ. They 3 see the Old Testament in light of the New Testament as they remain inside the large Jewish 4 entity and within their Jewish culture. In contrast, Jews who are theologically in Zone S
 5 believe that the Old Testament is to be interpreted in light of the Talmud and in light of what 6 the rabbis teach about Jesus. All one has to do is Google the question “What does the 7 Talmud⁵⁰ say about Jesus Christ?” to understand the difficulties a Jew faces when he or she 8 surrenders fully to Christ. Jews who are theologically in Zone S cannot be Messianic Jews.
 9 They will have contradictory convictions regarding their beliefs about Christ. They must 10 move out theologically to Zone R.

11 12 Similarly, Muslims who are theologically in Zone S and put their faith in Christ must move 13 out theologically from Zone S because of contradictory beliefs and convictions. MBBs⁵¹ 14 who move to Zone R remain inside their birth communities. They are insiders. We Evangelicals 15 in the United States, especially after 9/11, tend to be accepting of Insider Movements within 16 the Jewish culture but are much more apt to reject it within the Muslim World.

17
 18 For both the Messianic believer and the MBB who remain in their birth communities, what 19 is at stake is obedience to God’s Word and the leading of His Spirit. In every situation, 20 obedience to the Scriptures will demand confrontation with beliefs and culture.

21

9. Avoiding Syncretism

22

23 What about the shady areas, the zigzag line separating Zone R from Zone S in both the 24 rectangles of the Muslim world and Judaism? The zigzag line portrays a journey from 25 syncretism to sanctification, from Zone S to Zone R, which is a process whereby Jesus 26 guides His followers into a fuller understanding of who He is. In the Jan/Feb 2013 issue of 27 Christianity Today, an MBB who is a graduate of a Bible school and one of the leaders of 28 ministry within the Muslim world⁵² in East Africa describes the journey out of syncretism.⁵³

29

30 Muslims know that Isa al Masih [Jesus Christ] did miracles and that he will 31 come as the sign of the Day of Judgment. Even though they know all this, 32 they are not intentionally thinking about Isa [Jesus]; they are thinking about 33 Muhammad. But when we tell them the gospel, they begin to think about Isa

⁵¹ Muslim background believers in Christ

⁵² IM proponents wrongly use this article as another illustration of the successes of the Insider Movement. The author of the article in Christianity Today added a correction that appeared in the next issue pointing out that the person interviewed was a cultural insider and did not have a Muslim identity. The quote here is used only to describe the journey out of syncretism.

⁵³ <http://www.christianitytoday.com/ct/2013/january-february/>

1 intentionally as the one who will save them from the Day of Judgment, from 2 Satan, from antichrist, from death. At that point they mix Muhammad with Isa 3 al Masih [Jesus Christ]. Before, Isa was not the issue. Muhammad was the 4 issue. But when they hear about Isa, they start to bring Isa up to the level of 5 Muhammad. Before, Muhammad was the one who controlled their life. But 6 when they hear the Good News of the kingdom of God, they start to think 7 about Isa. Now syncretism has started; before there was no syncretism...
 8 When people start to think about Isa intentionally, the Holy Spirit has room to 9 lead them into all truth, even if they first mix Isa and Muhammad. The Holy 10 Spirit through time will glorify Isa al Mashi in their lives.⁵⁴

11 12 Mentors who help new believers transition from wrong theology to biblical theology need to 13 be patient and extend grace while being faithful and persistent in leading Muslims to follow 14 Christ fully. We extend grace to young Christians who have a hard time making sense of the 15 Trinity, or the union of Christ’s two natures. We extend grace to young believers who are 16 having difficulty reconciling things they were taught in a secular/humanist education with 17 the truth claims of Scripture. We need to extend similar grace to Muslims who have 18 surrendered their lives to Christ and are struggling with growth pains. Those new believers 19 are often relationally well connected to their own people and used to be immersed in wrong 20 theology. They are now moving on a difficult journey from syncretism. Although they are a 21 new creation in Christ with a new second-birth core identity,⁵⁵ most certainly they need now 22 to move from wrong theology to biblical theology. The transition is a process of sanctification.
 23 Mentors who are facilitating the transition represented by the zigzag line in the diagram 24 need to dare to think out of the box. Effective mentors should not fear this fine line and thus 25 quickly steer new believers to Zone Q to shelter them from syncretism. Instead, they should 26 take new believers into the Scriptures and help them build a solid foundation on the Word of 27 God. Mentors should of course be very much aware of the dangers of syncretism in Insider 28 Ministry or wherever it may be found.⁵⁶ We must approach the potential for syncretism with 29 genuine humility, especially in light of the fact that the church in the West tends to be 30 syncretistic, too, in how we view materialism, individualism, and nationalism.

31
 32 In our Calvinism, we tend to see regeneration happening in an instant (the person is saved or 33 unsaved). But the intellectual and spiritual transition is, at the level of phenomenal 34 observation, often gradual. John 3:8 means that we do not know exactly when regeneration 35 takes place in any one individual case. We cannot confidently evaluate whether someone is 36 “saved” until they are well along in the transition. Unfortunately, the word “sanctification” 37 suggests to those with Reformed theology that these people in transition are all already ⁵⁶ Discipling should be carried out inside the birth communities but not inside the Muslim institutions.

1 regenerate. We are not saying that. We are calling mentors to be realistic about their finite 2 point of view and not to make snap judgments. It is not our responsibility to look into the 3 heart and evaluate people's inward state in a way that only God can do. It is our responsibility 4 to share truth and with patience help them, wherever they may be in the process.

5 6 Insider Movement proponents need to communicate in humility the fact that no one has 7 entire answers for what might happen 50 or 100 years from now in their IM ministries. We 8 are all part of a learning process. While committed to our confessional standards, we also 9 need to learn together with believers who have not—either by choice or due to lack of 10 time—formulated their own ecclesiastically binding theological confession. In the meantime, 11 critics of the IM need to look at what God is doing in the world and pray for our brothers 12 and sisters in the IM, encourage them, and maintain a mutual accountability relationship 13 with those of them whom we know. We need to have an attitude of looking at the logs in our 14 own eyes before we attempt to help others with the specks in theirs.

15
 16 Messianic Jews in the zigzag area between Zones R and S will struggle with some important 17 questions: Are there good parts of the Talmudic culture that I can continue to see as part of 18 my Jewish culture? Can I attend the synagogue meetings, although I do not agree with the 19 theology of the rabbi? How can I live with integrity by calling myself a Jew when in reality I 20 do not agree with the theology of Zone S, and most of the Jews I know define themselves by 21 their rejection of Christ? How can I practice the Shabbat, Jewish holy days, and the dietary 22 laws without getting into legalism? Does my loyalty to the state of Israel push me into the 23 eschatology of Christian Zionism? How can I make myself accountable to the rest of the 24 body of Christ if I do not see them or listen to them? Am I living in a bubble? Who are my 25 mentors? Are my mentors in the same bubble?

26
 27 Muslim background believers in Christ who are living in the zigzag area between Zones R 28 and S struggle with similar questions: How do I determine what is sinful or non-sinful in the 29 Qur'an, Hadith,⁵⁷ Shari'a,⁵⁸ and the Islamic culture, especially in the disputable matters?⁵⁹ 30 Can I go regularly to the mosque and do the ceremonial prayers outwardly while inwardly I 31 am repeating certain texts that I have memorized from the Bible? Is this deception? How do 32 I fast Ramadan with my extended family without being deceptive? Can I live with a clear 33 conscience by quoting freely from the Qur'an in my evangelism, perhaps risking the false 34 impression that I am endorsing the Qur'an as a holy book? How am I different, for example, 35 from Jehovah's Witnesses in how they use the Bible in their evangelism if I load the Qur'an 36 with my own interpretations, which are different from how Muslims interpret these verses?

⁵⁷ Life and teaching of Muhammad

⁵⁸ Shari'a is the moral code and the religious law of Islam. It covers secular law including crime, politics and economics as well as personal matters such as sexual intercourse, hygiene, diet, prayer and fasting.

⁵⁹ Romans 14:1–4

2 listen to them? Am I living in a bubble? Who are my mentors? Are my mentors in the same

10. Use of the Qur'an in Evangelism

5
6 There are several sources of the Qur'an. The most important are: 1) The Old Testament,⁶⁰
7 2) Rabbinical Jewish literature,⁶¹ 3) The New Testament⁶² and 4) Heretical Christian 8 literature.⁶³ Muhammad was exposed to an oral tradition which included at least these four 9 sources. He assumed that whatever he heard about the Jews came from the Old Testament, 10 and whatever he heard about Christ and Christianity came from the New Testament. He 11 probably was not aware of the Rabbinical Jewish literature or the heretical Christian 12 literature that were impacting the oral tradition of the day in that region of Arabia. Because 13 the Qur'an has about 90 verses that talk about Jesus, Mary and Christians, many people 14 think it is a great tool for evangelizing Muslims. The Qur'an does acknowledge the virgin 15 birth. It speaks about Jesus⁶⁴ healing the blind, the sick and those with leprosy.⁶⁵ It speaks of 16 Him raising the dead. It says that He is now in heaven and will come back to earth on the 17 day of judgment as the "sign of the hour." However, the Qur'an rejects the divinity of Christ 18 and His crucifixion. His divinity is rejected on the basis of a false understanding of the 19 Trinity.⁶⁶ The Qur'an rejects a trinity made up of God, Mary, and Jesus,⁶⁷ and we reject that 20 trinity as well. As for Christ's crucifixion, the Qur'an claims that God did not abandon His 21 beloved prophet. He intervened miraculously by taking Jesus to heaven, and God's enemies 22 crucified someone else. It only "appeared to them" that it was Jesus who was on the cross.⁶⁸ 23

24 There are many Muslim background believers in Christ who were attracted to Christ and to 25 the Bible because of the Qur'an. It is surprising, though, to hear of an American Caucasian

⁶⁰ An illustration is Leviticus 10:10 regarding the holy and common, the clean and unclean.

⁶¹ In Surah 7:64 in the Qur'an there is a record about Abraham breaking idols. "The fight against idolatry begun by the Prophets (Biblical Prophets) was continued by the Pharisees. Abraham, the father of the Hebrew people, they taught, started on his career as an idol wrecker. In legends, parables and discourses, they showed forth the folly and futility of idol worship..."(Former Chief Rabbi J H Hertz from the "Book of Jewish Thoughts" Published by the office of the Chief Rabbi London 1942) <http://www.answering-islam.org/Quran/Sources/abraham.html>

1 man who was attracted to Christ because of the Qur’an. In April 2012 he wrote me an e-mail 2 after reading one of my books.

3

4 It is funny, because I was an atheist most of my life, joined the U.S. military at 5 age 34, read the Qur’an multiple times, and because of all the references to the 6 Bible finally picked up a Bible and just recently gave my life to Christ. I joke 7 in my Church because I still say the Qur’an brought me to Jesus.

8

9 A certain missionary who is immersed in ministry to Muslims in an Arab country knows 10 how to use the Qur’an effectively in evangelism. He shares an interesting story. One of his 11 friends, a Muslim background believer in Christ, was surprised by how much Islam is under 12 attack these days by Christians in the West. He told the missionary:⁶⁹

13

14 You Christians come into our deep dark cave wanting to tell us about the 15 sunlight outside since you have access to the truth through the Bible. All we 16 have in the Qur’an is the light of a candle and it is of great value inside that 17 dark deep cave. Do you have to snuff out our candle to convince us of the 18 sunlight outside? Why don’t you lead us out as we hold on to our candle in the 19 dark?”

20

21 It is one thing for MBBs who put their faith in Christ to quote the Qur’an in their evangelism 22 to Muslims, but it is something else for Christian-background persons to quote the Qur’an in 23 their evangelism, perhaps indirectly communicating that they endorse it as truth. IM 24 proponents say that Paul quoted Enoch and other non-biblical literature without endorsing 25 them as truth (Acts 17:28, Titus 1:12, and Jude 4, 6, 9, 13 and 14). Before using the Qur’an in 26 their evangelism, Egyptian Navigators make their position clear early in the relationship by 27 using this qualifying statement, “According to what you believe,” before they begin to quote 28 the Qur’an in their evangelism. This seems to be a more helpful way of using the Qur’an.

29

30 A certain American Christian with a heart to reach out to Muslims introduced himself to a 31 Muslim leader by saying: “I am a serious student of the four holy books, the Tawrat, the 32 Zabur, the Injil and the Qur’an.”⁷⁰ Perhaps this brother was trying to be respectful to this 33 Muslim leader, but he knows deep in his heart that the Qur’an is not a holy book and should 34 not be placed at the same level as the Bible. Is this a form of deception? Or is it only a 35 strategy—to start with the Qur’an and transition to the Bible—and with time wean the Muslim 36 from the Qur’an? My preference is to use a qualifying statement early in the relationship with 37 Muslims, stating, “according to what you believe” before quoting the Qur’an.

⁶⁹ The story has been modified slightly to fit this context.

⁷⁰ Tawrat, Zabur and Injil are the Qur’anic terms for the Old Testament and the New Testament.

11. Desired Outcome

1
2 It is possible and desirable for many MBBs who are fully surrendered to Christ to remain 3 connected relationally with friends and family for the sake of the expansion of the gospel.⁷¹

4 It is possible and desirable for MBBs who have surrendered their lives to Christ to be called 5 to remain within their birth communities in Zone R, provided there is neither deception 6 regarding their faith in Christ nor incompatible formulations regarding the gospel or the 7 Scriptures.

13 Theologically speaking, it is an impossibility for MBBs to remain in Zone S if they are fully 14 surrendered to Christ. How can a MBB be fully committed to Christ and at the same time 15 believe that Muhammad is superior to Christ and that the Qur'an is superior to the Bible?
16 This is schizophrenia. MBBs who began in Zone S but have come to know Christ must 17 move theologically to Zone R where they adhere to biblical theology in order to be effective 18 insiders within the Muslim world. This report is not speaking about social relationships but 19 about doctrinal beliefs regarding Christ, the Bible, Muhammad, and the Qur'an. They can 20 continue to be relationally connected to Muslim relatives and friends whether they are in 21 Zone R or Zone S. But theologically they need to move out from Zone S to Zone R.

22
23 With fanatical Muslims in Zone S who are driven by an attitude of self-righteousness, a 24 different approach to ministry could be used. At times, a confrontational approach might be 25 needed to shake them up. For instance, Jay Smith shakes fanatical Muslims at the Speakers' 26 Corner in London who come to heckle him.⁷² He shakes the foundations of Islam by 27 questioning the historicity of Muhammad and the Qur'an. Father Zakaria Botros,⁷³ an 28 Orthodox priest from Egypt who has a TV ministry in Arabic, shakes Muslims with an 29 attack mainly on Hadith⁷⁴ through quotes that make no sense to rational Muslims. Some 30 Muslims get so shaken that they begin to doubt. Doubting Islam could lead them to faith in 31 Christ. Unfortunately, it could also lead them to atheism or drugs or even to the breakdown 32 of the fabric of society in the Muslim world. Others feel cornered by his logic and reasoning 33 and respond with rage, as we have seen in the Middle East and the Muslim world after the 1 trailer of the film about Muhammad went viral on YouTube in September 2012. The trailer

3 4 12. Comfort and Tolerance Spheres

5 As Evangelicals, each one of us should determine before God what is our narrow sphere of 6 theological preference and what is our wider sphere of tolerance.⁷⁵ There are three 7 assumptions and convictions that define a healthy sphere of preference. We should:

- 8
 9 • Stand for theological formulations about Christ and the Scriptures that are 10 consistent with biblical teaching.
 11 • Not demonize Muhammad and the Qur'an.
 12 • Not sugarcoat Muhammad and the Quran.

16
 17 My wider sphere of tolerance regarding MBBs who begin to follow Christ goes as far as to 18 include a place of belonging relationally either in Zone Q or in Zone R. Some MBBs 19 choose to integrate into Christendom and move to Zone Q. Others might be called to remain 20 relationally connected and live in Zone R within the Muslim world, functioning as yeast in 21 the dough.⁷⁶ Assuming that both types of MBBs, whether in Zone Q or Zone R, are fully 22 surrendered to Christ, they should be given the freedom to make their own decisions and 23 follow their own conscience.⁷⁷ The difficulty is with the grey areas represented in the 24 diagram by the zigzag line. Our responsibility is to pray for those who are experimenting in 25 the grey areas (with things such as what to call themselves) that they will remain deeply 26 committed to the core doctrines of our faith as they increasingly know, love and become like 27 Jesus Christ. It is our responsibility to encourage them and help them maintain accountability 28 relationships with mentors who dare to challenge them when needed.⁷⁸

⁷⁵ In general, as PCA TE and RE our sphere of theological preference would be reformed theology, but our sphere of theological preference would go as wide as to include evangelicals from other denominations with whom we can fellowship and cooperate.

⁷⁶ Matthew 13:33

⁷⁷ 1 Corinthians 8:10–12; 10:25–29

⁷⁸ At the end of this report are suggested questions that Missions Committees can use to interact with the missionaries they support.

1 There is an organizational concept called “freedom within a framework.” Both key words, 2 “freedom” and “framework,” are important. Freedom promotes creativity, contextualization, 3 ownership, flexibility, and empowerment to do the ministry. When unrestrained, however, 4 freedom can threaten the health of the organization. Effectiveness, focus, accountability and 5 stewardship can be at risk with unrestrained freedom. Framework provides the structure to 6 promote healthy freedom. There can be flexibility and creativity within the framework of the 7 non-negotiable.

8
9 The expansion of the gospel should be our passion and calling.⁷⁹ At the same time, we as 10 leaders need to encourage sound doctrine and to refute those who oppose it (Titus 1:9). It is 11 good to be willing to live with a tolerance of ambiguity when it comes to working through 12 the grey areas (the zigzag line) with the disputable issues,⁸⁰ yet at the same time we are 13 grateful for the Church Councils⁸¹ and the Confessions of Faith⁸² that provide us with very 14 clear examples of biblical articulations of faith. The councils and confessions provide 15 essential guidance because our forefathers were often wrestling with very similar issues to 16 those we face today.

17
18 There are two extremes when it comes to dealing with tradition. One extreme goes as far as 19 making the confessions of faith as their primary lens. They see the Scriptures through the 20 lens of the confessions of faith. Scripture is forced to play a supporting role rather than the 21 other way around. On the other hand, there are people who deeply suspect tradition as 22 embodying the sinfulness and worldliness of the church rather than its wisdom. J.I. Packer, 23 in his chapter on tradition, says:

24
25 Tradition allows us to stand on the shoulders of the many giants who have thought 26 about Scripture before us. We can gather from the consensus of the greatest and 27 widest body of Christian thinkers from the early Fathers to the present an invaluable 28 resource for understanding the Bible responsibly. Nevertheless, those interpretations 29 (traditions) are never final; they need always to be submitted to Scripture for further 30 review.⁸³

31 32 The Scriptures in vernacular expressions are their own best safeguard of consistency with 33 traditionally recognized formulations. Those who are working through these disputable 34 issues in the grey areas are walking a tight rope dangerously and courageously for the sake 35 of the expansion of the gospel. They need to keep in mind that the standards set by the

1 summary of doctrinal orthodoxy in the historic and worldwide church comprise their safety
 2 net. They should not be walking that tight rope without the safety net beneath them.

13. Frame of Reference

4 Those who are involved in an insider approach to ministry need to be careful not to make 5 Islam and the Islamic system of reasoning their frame of reference. In trying to become all 6 things to all men so that by all possible means they might save some,⁸⁴ there is a danger that 7 they might lose their anchor. Our anchor should be connected to a solid rock with a strong 8 metal chain and not with a rubber bungee cord. We need to be careful not to compromise our 9 frame of reference, namely the gospel and the Scriptures. We should not tailor our message to 10 fit the Islamic theology or its system of reasoning, thus potentially compromising the 11 doctrine of the Triune God, which is a mystery. An extreme illustration of this loss of frame 12 of reference would be to “endorse” verses in the Qur’an that say when Jesus was a child, He 13 created a bird by God’s permission.⁸⁵ “Endorsing” such a teaching would be to endorse 14 heretical Christian literature, which is the source of these verses in the Qur’an.

14. Living in Zone R with No Deception

17 Here are some key questions: How can MBBs genuinely be fully committed followers of 18 Christ with no deception as they remain in their birth communities within the Muslim world
 19 in Zone R? In other words, how can MBBs stay within their birth communities and show 20 respect for Islam without either compromise or deception? How would they relate to 21 Muhammad and the Qur’an? There are two reasonable ways that Muslims on their journey 22 to Christ can address the key questions of what they really think of Muhammad and the 23 Qur’an. Both options can help those who are called to remain in their birth communities 24 think on these difficult issues on their journey.

Option One

29 Jay Smith⁸⁶ researched and studied the teachings of Western Revisionists such as Patricia 30 Crone⁸⁷ and John Wansbrough,⁸⁸ who examined the history of Islam using archeology and 31 modern scientific research. According to the Revisionists, there are big question marks 32 about the historicity of the city of Mecca, the dates of the Qibla orientation (direction of 33 prayer), the dates of the canonization of the Qur’an, and the Shahada (Muslim statement of 1 faith).⁸⁹ From Jay Smith’s research and other materials, it can be concluded that there are 2 two Muhammads. There was a “real Muhammad” who did not perceive himself as a prophet 3 or as the Messenger of God but merely warned the Meccans that God is one and that 4 idolatry is evil. Muslim historians claim that the Qur’an was canonized 20 years after the 5 death of Muhammad (652 AD), while the Revisionists concluded that the Qur’an was 6 probably canonized at least 120 years after the death of Muhammad. So the Qur’an that 7 Muslims have today contains the “real Muhammad” as well as the “original material of the 8 Qur’an,” which is associated with that “original Muhammad.” The Qur’an also contains the 9 “folklore Muhammad” with all the veneration that was bestowed upon him over several 10 generations. Imagine if we had a Bible that contained the 66 books as well as all the 11 teachings on the veneration of Mary through several generations. To some extent, it can be 12 deduced from the research of the Revisionists, that is what Muslims have today in their 13 Qur’an. The Revisionists’ account of Islamic history is based on archeology and scientific 14 research and appears to be closer to the truth.⁹⁰ This means that the real reconstructionists 15 are not the revisionists but are actually the traditional historians of Islam who accepted the 16 folklore Muhammad as a real person without thorough historical research.

17
 18 CHRISTENDOM MUSLIM WORLD

23 MBBs who are called to remain in Zone R may have high respect for the “original 24 Muhammad” while rejecting the “folklore Muhammad.” They would be perceived by their 25 friends and relatives as Muslims who think out of box, or as some mystics who are known to 26 love Jesus, like Ibn Arabi,⁹¹ and others who have “strange” ideas. This line of thinking could 27 help MBBs inside Zone R to live without self-deception, loving and respecting only the 28 “real Muhammad,” and rejecting the “folklore Muhammad.” Like African Americans who 29 highly respect Martin Luther King, Jr., MBB insiders who remain in their birth communities 30 in Zone R could have a similar respect for Muhammad. They can adhere to the non-sinful 31 aspects in their heritage and have a social identity within their birth communities.

⁸⁹ Shahada “There is not God but God. Muhammad is the Messenger of God.”

⁹⁰ The Qur'an has not gone through the scrutiny of higher criticism by Muslim scholars like the Bible has gone through by “Christian” scholars like Bultman and others in the twentieth century. When MBBs are exposed to the Revisionists’ perspective regarding Muhammad and the Qur'an, they need to learn of how the Bible has gone through the fire of scrutiny in the twentieth century and how it came out stronger than ever.

1 Option Two

2

3 A starting point for MBBs who are called to remain as insiders within Zone R is based on

4 Mahmoud Taha's⁹² book, *The Second Message of Islam*⁹³ and his disciple, An Na'im.⁹⁴ An-

5 Na'im, who holds a PhD in Islamic law from the University of Edinburgh in Scotland, is the 6 best articulator of Taha's theology. Taha was a Sudanese theologian who developed a theory

7 that reversed the theory of Abrogation. Both Taha and An-Na'im are included in the book

8 Liberal Islam,⁹⁵ which was edited by Korzman. Both men, Taha and An-Naim, are not 9 considered heretical Muslims but are considered liberal Muslims, a highly significant

10 distinction. Most of the open-minded Muslims who are trying to remain within the Muslim

11 world and yet are trying to live and function in the 21st century tend to follow the same line

12 of reasoning as Taha and An Na'im, although they may have never heard of them.

13

14 The Theory of Abrogation claims that later revelation can abrogate—correct or delete—

15 earlier contradictory revelation. The problem with this theory is that, in general, tolerance in 16 the Qur'an, Hadith, and Shari'a are associated with the Meccan (early) period in 17 Muhammad's life (611–622), while militancy against other religions, bad treatment of 18 women, and slavery are mostly associated with the Medinan (later) period (622–632).

19 According to the theory of abrogation, militancy abrogates tolerance; this is the heart of the 20 fundamentalists' argument. Mahmoud Taha believed that Muhammad was given a pure

21 message in the Meccan period (611–622 AD), but because people were so primitive, they 22 rejected that pure message and persecuted Muhammad. So Muhammad, along with his 23 followers, ran for their lives to Medina in 622 AD. During that period in the city of Median,

24 God, in his mercy, started giving him, through the angel Gabriel, a diluted message

25 according to Taha. This message would be more understandable to the people of that time

26 whose hardened hearts kept them from receiving the pure truth.⁹⁶ Under this argument, the 27 militancy, bad treatment of women, and texts in the Qur'an that are critical of Judaism and 28 Christianity have served their transitional purpose. Those texts, which exist in the Qur'an, 29 Hadith, and Shari'a, and are associated with the Medinan period (622–632) according to 30 Taha, were given to primitive people and are not applicable today.⁹⁷ Taha also asserts that 31 the militancy texts have no universal application but were applicable only at the time of

⁹² http://www.martinfrost.ws/htmlfiles/mahmoud_taha.html

⁹⁴ <http://www.law.emory.edu/aannaim/>

⁹⁵ <http://kurzman.unc.edu/liberal-islam/>

⁹⁶ Muhammad's core message in the Meccan period contained mainly the following: God is one. He is transcendent. He is the judge, therefore there is heaven and hell. He is merciful and compassionate. He is the provider. We need to care for orphans and widows. The message was a monotheistic message and a continuation of what was revealed earlier to Jews and Christians. If Jews and Christians follow their religions faithfully they would find favor with God and that religion was a matter of free choice.

⁹⁷ Mahmoud Taha's book "The Second Message of Islam"

1 Muhammad to help Muslims develop self-confidence. In contrast, the texts of the Qur'an 2 that go back to the Meccan period (611–622), as well as the corresponding parts of the 3 Hadith and Shari'a that contain the pure message, have a universal application. These are 4 the parts of the Qur'an that are compatible with human rights⁹⁸ and with the 21st century.

5
6 Open-minded Muslims tend to follow the same line of thinking of Mahmoud Taha as they 7 deal with difficult texts in the Qur'an related to militancy against infidels, slavery and bad 8 treatment of women. Though they may not know of Taha or read the writings of An-Na'im, 9 they may still possess this line of thinking. Some Muslims at the beginning of their journey
10 to Christ will find reason to remain sincerely within their birth communities in the large tent 11 of the Muslim world without taking on what is perceived to be its common beliefs and 12 practices that are anti-biblical.⁹⁹ They would start from Taha's position, and as they put their 13 faith in Christ, the Bible replaces the Qur'an as the only source of truth. Insider Ministries 14 proponents point to this repeated phenomenon. As they come to know Christ, the Qur'an 15 remains a "spiritual" book for them but certainly not equivalent to the Bible. Its Meccan 16 parts would be informative and even inspiring, but not part of God's revelation.

17
18 How would a true reformation come about in Islam according to thoughtful and open-19 minded Muslims who are experiencing an identity crisis of how to remain within the 20 Muslim world yet live in the 21st century?

21
22
23 According to Taha and An Naim, peeling the Hadith and the Shari's from around the Qur'an 24 does not produce a true reformation within Islam. True reformation, according to those 25 thoughtful and open-minded Muslims, would not come, as it were, through Sola Qur'ana 26 (the Qur'an without the Hadith and the Shari'a) but through Sola Meccana. (For those 27 Muslims, the Meccan section in the diagram has universal application. The Medinan section 28 served its transitional purpose and is no longer applicable today). An-Naim states:

⁹⁸ <http://www.law.emory.edu/aannaim/>

⁹⁹ The story of Fatima in Chapter 4 in The Crescent Through the Eyes of the Cross illustrates this point.

1

2 Unless the basis of modern Islamic law is shifted away from the texts of the 3 Qur'an and Sunna [or Hadith, the life and teaching of Muhammad] of the 4 Medina stage [622-632 AD], which constituted the foundations of the 5 construction of Shari'a, there is no way of avoiding the drastic and serious 6 violation of universal standards of human rights. There is no way to abolish 7 slavery as a legal institution and no way to eliminate all forms of shades of 8 discrimination against women and non-Muslims as long as we remain bound 9 by the framework of Shari'a... The traditional techniques of reform within the 10 framework of Shari'a are inadequate for achieving the necessary degree of 11 reform. To achieve that degree of reform, we must be able to set aside clear 12 and definite texts of the Qur'an and Sunna [life and teaching of Muhammad] 13 of the Medina stage as having served their transitional purpose and implement 14 those texts of the Meccan stage [612-622 AD] which were previously 15 inappropriate for practical application but are now the only way to proceed.¹⁰⁰

16

17 Muslims who are journeying toward Christ might feel called to remain as insiders in Zone R, 18 reversing abrogation as An-Naim does. As they continue on the journey, they can become 19 committed followers of Christ who have respect for Muhammad, as many people respect 20 Gandhi, but they do not believe that he is a prophet.

21

22 I like this second option as a starting point of the journey out of Zone S and toward Christ.
 23 This second option could be very appealing to Muslims on that journey, giving them hope 24 that it is legitimate to move out of Zone S. As they continue on the journey, they might end 25 up with Option 1 as they decide what to think of Muhammad and the Qur'an.¹⁰¹ Early on 26 the journey toward Christ, the Muslims in Zone R could look at those two options with 27 these two perspectives in mind and perceive what in the Qur'an is compatible with 28 Scriptures to be like a candle inside a dark cave.¹⁰² Then with that candle they walk out of 29 the cave to the sunlight of Christ and the Scriptures, where that candle is no longer needed.
 30 They continue to use that candle as they go back to the dark cave to persuade other Muslims 31 to start the initial steps of walking out to the light of Christ and the Scriptures. Thus they 32 continue to use the Qur'an in their evangelism. On this journey from Zone S to Zone R, ¹⁰⁰ Korzma, Charles. Liberal Islam. 1998. Section on Mahmoud Taha.

¹⁰¹ Option one is covered a couple of pages earlier.

¹⁰² The "candle" inside the dark cave could be the positive verses on Jesus in the Qur'an.

1 they know how to communicate with their relatives and friends about what they think of 2 Muhammad and the Qur'an and thus they do not rupture their relationships with family and 3 friends but focus on living for Christ without self-deception.
4

15. A Truly Transformed MBB

5 6 Muslim background believers in Christ must determine how to maintain a balance. They 7 need to maintain balance between living transformed lives before articulating the gospel to 8 family and friends, and at the same time not becoming fearful and living as secret believers
9 indefinitely before articulating the gospel. For some it may be unwise to share verbally soon 10 after coming to faith. Timing and wisdom are key. As MBBs seek to live a transformed life 11 before they start to articulate the gospel, each believer must determine how long to remain a 12 “secret” believer like Nicodemus¹⁰³ and Joseph of Arimathea¹⁰⁴ and when to openly identify 13 themselves as believers who are unashamed of Christ.¹⁰⁵ Earning the right to speak by 14 demonstrating a transformed life is critical. Fear keeps some from identifying with Christ; 15 this is sin that should be corrected with repentance. For others, it could be that although they 16 want to identify with Christ, they do not want to identify themselves with Western 17 “Christianity.” In the minds of those around them, “Christianity” in America endorses 18 Hollywood movies, homosexuality, and Christian Zionism.
19

16. Between a Rock and a Hard Place

20
21 Those who endorse this Minority Report live and function between a rock and a hard place.
22 Some IM proponents lump this line of thinking in with the critics of the Insider model 23 because it distinguishes between sinful and non-sinful aspects within the birth communities 24 of the Muslim world. This report states that MBBs who choose to live as insiders within the 25 Muslim world can live only within non-sinful aspects of their birth communities (Zone R).
26 At some point they will need to reject, resist and confront some sinful aspects of the Islamic 27 culture and theology in Zone S, mostly rooted in the Medinan theology, that contradict the 28 teaching of the Scriptures. We need to remember, though, that all cultures include sinful 29 aspects. The non-sinful parts, Zone R, are those parts that are not in any way in conflict with 30 the teachings of the Scriptures. These include theological issues such as rejecting the evil of 31 idolatry and the need to honor parents (Surah 17:23–24) and cultural issues such as Muslim 32 art and architecture.

¹⁰³ John 3

¹⁰⁴ John 19:38

¹⁰⁵ Mark 8:38

1 The diagram below depicts how some IM proponents in the past have perceived Islam. They 2 saw the entire Muslim world rectangle as a potential place for insiders since the problem is 3 only with a few tough texts in the Qur’an that are contradictory to Scriptures.

8 Those IM proponents saw that the problem was mainly with the Hadith¹⁰⁶ and the Sharia¹⁰⁷ 9 but not with the Qur’an. They claimed that there are only a few texts in the Qur’an that 10 caused a problem in evangelism to Muslims, and with proper translation and interpretation 11 of those texts, the problems would be solved. This report disagrees with that assumption.
 12 According to the Qur’an, Muhammad is the “seal” of the prophets, the recipient of the final 13 revelation, and therefore he is superior to Christ. This report considers those extreme IM 14 proponents as sugar-coating Islam by sugar-coating the tough texts in the Qur’an.

15

16 On the other hand, some critics of the Insider model lump those who endorse this Minority 17 Report with those sugar-coating IM proponents and assume that this report is compromising 18 biblical convictions. Those critics tend to demonize all or most of Islam and see no place for 19 MBBs to remain as salt and light among their own people. Because these critics start with the 20 assumption that Islam is simply a “false religion”—rather than seeing that the label “Muslim” 21 can also encompass the reality of social and cultural unity—they believe it is an impossibility 22 for MBBs to remain within the large tent of the Muslim world as in the diagram below.

27 Seeing all or most of the Muslim world as only Zone S, they believe a new MBB must move 28 out to Zone Q within Christendom. Rather than seeing the presence of MBBs within their 29 birth communities as an opportunity for the gospel to penetrate Islam from within, they tend 30 to see that as a curse. Some would even be willing to extend grace in terms of time even for 31 several generations, but they believe that ultimately the MBB should move from the Muslim 32 world to Zone Q. Perhaps this line of thinking comes as a result of the separation of church

¹⁰⁶ Life and teaching of Muhammad

¹⁰⁷ Shari'a is the moral code and the religious law of Islam. It covers secular law including crime, politics and economics as well as personal matters such as sexual intercourse, hygiene, diet, prayer and fasting.

1 and state in the West, and this influences how they judge issues. In Islam there is no such 2 separation. So when a Westerner says, “You have to leave Islam and become a Christian” 3 (meaning the false religious beliefs within Islam), the Muslim hears, “You have to commit 4 high treason by coming out from the large tent of the Muslim world and give up your first-5 birth identity.” Christians who demonize Islam believe that those MBBs cannot remain 6 connected to family and friends within the non-sinful parts of their birth communities (Zone 7 R) in the Muslim world. So according to those critics, whenever the yeast of the gospel 8 starts growing within the Muslim “pot of dough,” we need to scoop that yeast out and place 9 it in the Protestant pot of dough,¹⁰⁸ and thus stop the yeast from permeating and 10 transforming the Muslim pot. In many cases, some of those insiders get pushed out by 11 Muslims to Zone Q, but some others who are called and willing to pay the price manage to 12 stay as salt and light among their own people, winning their relatives and friends to Christ.
 13 Their presence is a sign of hope that the Muslim world in the coming generations can be 14 penetrated from the inside with the gospel.

15

16 There are MBBs who are whole-heartedly living for Christ in both Zone Q of Christendom 17 and in Zone R of the Muslim world. It is encouraging and amazing to hear testimonies of 18 people even within Zone S who are coming to know Christ and are moving quickly to Zone
 19 R or to Zone Q. (Please see Attachment 2 to read the exciting journey of a mature MBB 20 who is living for Christ in Zone R).

23

24

25 Before the January 25, 2011 Revolution in Egypt, Christians longed to see some cracks in 26 the thick wall of the Muslim world that prevented Muslims from putting their faith in Christ.
 27 Recently, Egyptian Christians began to see some of these cracks as a result of the 28 Revolution, which demolished the fear that has always existed in both Christians and 29 Muslims. Christians, in general, used to be afraid to share the gospel with Muslims. Muslims 30 used to be afraid to ask Christians about Christ and the Scriptures. Although there are no 31 subtitles in English, please watch this short video and observe how Egyptian Muslims are 32 attending Christian churches. Note specifically how the Muslim women respond to the 33 evangelistic message given by the Orthodox priest.¹⁰⁹

17. Diversity of Expressions of the Church

The diagram below presents three expressions of the Ekklesia in places such as Saudi Arabia, Malaysia, or Turkey. There is the obvious (established) church, represented by squares, and the hidden (underground) church represented by circles in which the gospel has penetrated a household (Oikos). Then there is the semi-hidden church in between the two, represented at the bottom in this diagram.

In the household or oikos, #11 is not strongly connected to his oikos, while # 18 is cross cultural and is connected to #12, a person from another (oikos) of “diamonds.” In the first century, the gospel moved from one oikos to another through relationships that were impacted by transformed lives. The circles in the circular oikos (household) are connected by parallel lines, indicating transformational relationships. When relationships were marked by truth, humility, grace, integrity and love, the gospel made a great impact. In the first century, the oikos was the social structure of the day; many parts of the Muslim world have similar social structures today.

The semi hidden church at the bottom of the diagram has the potential of becoming an obvious church (squares), or going underground and becoming a hidden or underground church (circles), leaving behind the two squares.¹¹⁰ This hidden church has tremendous potential to penetrate a people group.¹¹¹ The Book of Church Order of the Presbyterian Church in America acknowledges the existence of such a church.¹¹² This will be addressed in the next section on ecclesiology.

¹¹⁰ The “squares,” the two missionaries or national Christians, could have “circular” hearts and could serve and encourage discretely the “circles” to be effective in their walk with God and in their outreach to their oikos.

8 Is the hidden or underground church in destitute regions to be pitied or to be celebrated?
 9 One of the three leaders of a completely hidden underground church in a strict Muslim 10 country shared with me that if one week goes by without having new believers added to 11 their church, they begin to wonder, “What is wrong?” The members of these hidden 12 churches experience daily persecution from family members and society. At times, the 13 persecution is for Jesus’ sake and comes as a result of carrying the cross, and that is to be 14 expected. But at other times, the persecution is because of the zealous self-righteousness and 15 obnoxiousness of the new believers. Preaching down at relatives and friends before they see 16 a transformed life could result in unnecessary persecution, and that persecution is not for 17 Jesus’ sake. One MBB woman from an Arab country came to know Christ many years ago.
 18 In her newfound zeal for Christ, she ruptured every relationship in her family. It took sixteen 19 years to repair the damage before her family members were finally willing to listen to the 20 gospel. Suffering for Jesus’ sake is one thing; suffering because of bigotry and self-21 righteousness is a completely different thing.

22
 23 In a ministry in the Middle East that follows many of the principles of the Insider model, the 24 missionary/mentor reported:

25
 26 When a Muslim comes to faith in Christ, he or she is signing their death 27 warrant. We have to prepare new MBBs not only to live for Christ, but to die 28 for him... There is something about suffering inside the community which 29 bonds believers to others in the community. Even their enemies are impressed, 30 and some eventually come to faith... I do not advocate that MBBs deliberately 31 seek persecution and martyrdom. I counsel them to be cautious in relating 32 their faith to other Muslims, until they can know that their message will be 33 received... It is important that MBBs be taught to memorize the Scripture in 34 order to face persecution when neither the Bible nor believers may be present

1 to encourage them. The written or memorized Word of God is always present in 2 their hearts to comfort and guide and to provide witness to their persecutors.¹¹³ 3

4 This missionary intentionally trains MBBs to expect persecution and martyrdom and 5 prepares them to be ready when it comes. They have had several martyrs in that ministry in 6 addition to houses and cars being burned.
 7

8 The C1–C6 scale of Christ-centered communities¹¹⁴ is presented in an article by Timothy 9 Tennent.¹¹⁵ The scale is descriptive rather than prescriptive, yet it is clearly a one- 10 dimensional tool. Tennent’s article appears as a chapter in the book Theology in the Context 11 of World Christianity, and the title of the chapter is “Ecclesiology.” Tennent accurately 12 pinpointed identity as the key issue in evaluating the Inside Movement.
 13 14

15
 16

17 Tennent talks about C-6 people on the C1–C6 scale¹¹⁶ (the hidden, or underground church) 18 as if they are a sad reality. They are hidden because they are the persecuted church in very 19 difficult Muslim countries, and the only way for them to survive is to stay hidden. It appears 20 that Tennent assumed that a C6 church will “float” from underground status and become a 21 “real church” only when it becomes an “established and obvious” church and when 22 democracy sets its people free from fear and persecution. Does the Ekklesia of Christ need 23 democracy? We do not see C6 anywhere in the diagram above. Are these underground 24 churches a sad reality? Or are they to be admired and celebrated because in many ways they 25 look like the early church in the book of Acts, as well as other examples throughout history, 26 such as the 17th-19th-century “Hidden Christians” in Japan or the underground church in 27 China?

1 The early church in the Roman Empire spread like yeast in the dough and infiltrated the 2 society of that time with neither church bells nor fancy cathedrals. Yeast in dough does not 3 make noise. When the yeast is at work, we cannot see it. We see the results of its impact at a 4 later time as it infiltrates and impacts the society. What is taking place these days in Iran and 5 Saudi Arabia could serve as an example. God has used committed-Christian domestic 6 helpers from countries such as Sri Lanka and the Philippines who came to Saudi Arabia and 7 other Gulf countries to work. Some of these women were Christ-like domestic helpers who 8 planted the seed of the gospel in the hearts of many children who are growing up as a new 9 generation of Muslims who are more open to the gospel.¹¹⁷

10
11 What will protect these hidden churches from syncretism is their openness and commitment 12 to be mentored and coached by visiting leaders who are gifted pioneer missionaries and 13 sensitive Christian leaders from that same culture whenever possible. These churches need 14 mentors like Paul and his team, who visited new churches and wrote letters dealing with 15 potential heresies. Paul instructed them in how to live by faith and obedience, growing in 16 their knowledge and love of Jesus Christ, becoming more like Him as they matured.

17 18 18. Ecclesiology

19 If a PCA missionary team goes to a Muslim country to plant a church, their task is clear and 20 obvious. They will adhere to the marks of the church. According to the Westminster 21 Confession of Faith, the Marks of the Church are: 1) true preaching of the Word,¹¹⁸ 2) the 22 administration of sacraments (Baptism and the Lord's Supper) and 3) discipline.¹¹⁹

23
24 If, on the other hand, a certain mission organization team goes to a Muslim country to start a 25 ministry, it will be a different situation if they are not familiar with the Marks of the Church.
26 To start with, the members of the team could be made up of Anglicans, Baptists, 27 Presbyterians, and others. The PCA missionary on the team has the freedom to practice his 28 Presbyterian convictions in his personal life and family life. His children would be baptized 29 as infants. His fellow team member, a Baptist, believes only in adult baptism and practices 30 that in his family life. As a team, however, they have to agree on what is absolutely essential 31 in planting a healthy church. These essentials have to be biblical, generic, and inclusive to 32 all the members of the team.

¹¹⁷ <http://vaticaninsider.lastampa.it/en//world-news/detail/articolo/kuwait-cristianesimo-christianism-cristianos-11709/>

¹¹⁸ According to reformed theology, if there is true preaching of the Word, then it should result in commitment to Christ, depth in the Scriptures, obedience, prayer, fellowship and reaching out to the lost.

¹¹⁹ WCF 7.6,

1 What are the spelled-out essentials for a healthy church in a Muslim setting that MBBs 2 should aspire to?¹²⁰ 1) A minimum of two or three people meeting together on a regular 3 basis in a place like an apartment.¹²¹ 2) People who have surrendered their lives to Christ as 4 their Lord, who desire to obey the Holy Spirit and worship the Father.¹²² 3) Accepting the 5 Word of God as the authority that shapes their lives, who preach it, teach it, study it, 6 memorize it, and above all obey it.¹²³ 4) People who truly fellowship with one another¹²⁴ 7 and 5) Who reach out to the lost.¹²⁵ 6) When the numbers grow, elders and a government 8 structure come into the picture. 7) People are baptized and the agape meal (the Lord’s 9 Supper) might be practiced on weekly basis. These are very high standards; hardly a church 10 in the West measures up to them. These are goals that the young church should keep in 11 focus and aspire to.

12

13 Leadership and discipline will come when, for example, the head of a household exercises a 14 role like that of an elder, not only leading his own household but also having a heart to 15 encourage other households in that town or city.¹²⁶ Deacons will give servant leadership to 16 their own households.¹²⁷ The number of believers will naturally increase, and of course the 17 Lord’s Supper or the agape meal will be practiced where these brothers and sisters 18 experience together a special presence of Christ.¹²⁸ Baptism should be done, but at the right 19 time and for the right reasons.¹²⁹ More than anything else, there is a great deal of abuse of 20 baptism in ministries in the Muslim world. When baptism is done at the right time and for 21 the right reason . . .

22

23 It is the decisive turning point for an inquirer or seeker to become identified as 24 an MBB... Those who have been baptized gather naturally into their family or 25 friendship groups. They protect each other and provide for each other’s 26 physical and social needs. The timing of a MBB’s baptism should be the 27 prerogative of the man or woman of peace who won them to the Lord and is 28 discipling them... Sometimes a Muslim’s baptism is delayed until they can 29 lead other family members or friends to the faith and join them to establish a

4 So what is “church” to a group of evangelical missionaries from different denominations 5 operating together as a mixed team in a Muslim country? The Ekklesia is the people of God 6 who are called out of the world to glorify Him and to carry out the Great Commission to the 7 elect, whom God has chosen before the foundation of the world. The Ekklesia has a 8 covenantal identity with a covenant of grace to Jews and Gentiles.¹³¹ God’s people in the 9 Old Testament were the roots and the trunk of the olive tree, but with the new covenant, the 10 Gentiles were grafted as branches into that same tree.¹³² God’s people are to be the salt and 11 light of the earth as they are dispersed all over the globe. They are to be the yeast of the 12 Kingdom penetrating the dough. They are sojourners or exiles.¹³³ They are not supposed to 13 live in secluded, exclusive ghetto communities; rather, they are in the world yet not of the 14 world.
15

16 In Egypt, there is a reoccurring phenomenon: Newlywed couples who are committed 17 Christians look for apartments in buildings owned by other born-again Christians. Sometimes 18 every resident in the building is a believer. These believers tend to send their children to 19 Christian schools, go to Christian doctors, and work in Christian companies. They live their 20 Christian lives in isolation, dreaming of one day emigrating to the West when the opportunity 21 opens. Some Christian leaders have started asking young couples who have a strong walk 22 with the Lord to not live such lives of isolation and separatism. The slogan that they chose, 23 “manara bikul amara,” rhymes in Arabic. It means “a lighthouse in every apartment 24 building.” Young couples who have strong relationships with God are encouraged to look 25 for apartments in buildings where Muslims and nominal Christians live, rather than in 26 buildings filled with believers.

27 The Ekklesia in the Muslim world is not just to be experienced and lived out on the day of 28 public worship in a church building for 90 minutes.¹³⁴ It is also lived out every day of the 29 week, as church members live their lives as salt and light among relatives, workmates, 30 classmates, friends, and neighbors. One of the most distinguishing characteristics of an 31 Ekklesia is the “one another” aspect, taught throughout the New Testament.¹³⁵ To stay 32 healthy and growing, church members should seek to have: 1) an intimate relationship with 33 God and to stay in the Word of God, 2) a strong relationship with one another as believers

 4 In Australia, there is so much land that they do not need to build fences to keep the cattle in.
 5 Instead they dig wells, and the cows learn not to stray far away from the well. As the church 6 moves forward, its people need to realize that they cannot be merely “well centered” or 7 “centered-set” as this short video¹³⁶ says. Other churches focus so much on the “fences,” or 8 the bounded-set aspects of who is in and who is out, that outsiders feel intimidated and 9 hesitate to join. The history of this debate¹³⁷ goes far back, and there are many views.¹³⁸ The 10 centered-set and bounded-set thinking need to balance one another. It is not enough to be 11 centered set; there should also be bounded-set perspective where there is discipline, 12 membership, and leadership. Government, boundaries, structure, and discipline are necessary 13 as the church matures. Paul sent Titus back to make sure that a government structure (elders, 14 bishops, leaders) was in place, and this could take years in a Muslim setting.¹³⁹

15
19. The Elect in “Destitute” Regions

16
 17 In the book of Revelation, John writes about his glimpse of the future that awaits us and 18 gives us a decryption of the elect:

19 20 After this I looked and there before me was a great multitude that no one 21 could count, from every nation, tribe, people and language, standing before 22 the throne and in front of the Lamb. They were wearing white robes and were 23 holding palm branches in their hands.” That scene describes the fact that 24 among the elect there are and will be many MBBs from all over the Muslim 25 World. We could argue that most of those elect from Muslim backgrounds 26 today will not be from the various expressions of the established churches, but 27 rather will be from churches in destitute regions¹⁴⁰ hidden from our eyes. The 28 Book of Church Order points out that the church of Christ includes what it 29 calls “churches in destitute regions” along with missional and particular 30 churches. “In like manner, Christians whose lot is cast in destitute regions 31 ought to meet regularly for the worship of God.¹⁴¹

32
 33 In 1976 after Mao Zedong died, an article described the church of Christ in China. The article 34 pointed out that before Mao took over, the number of Christians in China was about one 35 million. With Mao’s suppression of the church, the church went underground. There was the 1 small established church that had the approval of Mao’s regime, and there was the huge 2 hidden underground church that multiplied over the years. By the time of Mao’s death, the 3 underground church increased to an estimated 40 million.

4
5 According to the International Religious Freedom Report 2004, the U.S. State Department estimates that there are 6 300,000 Christians in Iran, the majority of whom are ethnic Armenians and Assyrians. Yet modern reports about 7 the church of Christ in Iran claim that the number is between 500,000 and one million. There is no way to find out 8 the exact numbers. One thing is clear though, that the number is huge and most of these underground churches are 9 in “destitute regions” and meet secretly in apartments. Such churches are quietly infiltrating the fissures of Islam.
10 Here again is a key question: Are all the elect among Muslims today in the established churches where they can 11 be seen and counted or are they in the hidden underground church? Life is easy in the abstract, but when we look 12 at the reality on the ground things become messy and hard to put into our categories.

20. Identity

13
14 Timothy Tenennt pointed out rightly that identity is the key issue in our study of the Insider 15 Movement. It is the key that allows MBBs to remain as insiders among their own people.
16 Without that identity in place, it is impossible to remain as an insider. Register, in his 17 ministry among Arabs in the Holy Land, describes what happens:

18 19 The individual Muslim receives his identity from his or her family, clan, and 20 nation. Islam capitalized on the group cohesion... Group or clan loyalty 21 requires total dedication. To leave Islam is to leave the family group which 22 gives Muslims their identity. Islam maintains a tight control over its adherents 23 through physical, mental and spiritual bonds. There is no back door out of 24 Islam. To leave is to become a murtad, or backslider who has returned to 25 paganism and gone astray. The only alternative is to return to Islam or face the 26 death penalty. A system of scolding, threats, bribery, sexual enticement or 27 deprivation, exclusion, job loss, and finally death by starvation, poisoning or 28 stabbing has been devised to ensure that backsliders return to the fold. All of 29 the above are good reasons to encourage MBBs to remain in their family or 30 clan in order to quietly influence their spouses, children, relatives and friends 31 to receive the gospel and be saved... There are cases where extraction cannot 32 be avoided, but we are finding that most Muslims have trusted friends and 33 family members who will quickly share the joy of their new faith in Jesus. If 34 they remain respectful of their parents and spouses and leaders of their family 35 and clan they can slowly influence many of them to read the Bible and 36 discover personally the truth that they have found. Lifestyle changes cannot be 37 hidden and this causes others to seek out the source of their new life.”¹⁴²

¹⁴² Ray Register, Discipling Middle Eastern Believers. GlobalEdAdvance Press. Pages 59–60.

1 The Insider Movement does not fit into a C1–C6 scale.¹⁴³ It does not speak of our identity in 2 Christ as the only identity. Perhaps the discussion could take on new depth if we look at the 3 various levels of identities, such as the core identity, the social identity, and the collective 4 identity.

5
 6 When individuals are born into the Muslim world, they inherit their first-birth community 7 identity. This first birth determines the individual's:

- 8 • Race
- 9 • Language
- 10 • Citizenship
- 11 • Ethnicity
- 12 • Religious background
- 13 • Culture
- 14 • Social and economic class, etc.

15
 16 The first birth provides individuals with a non-sinful identity (Zone R) and a sinful identity 17 (Zone S) since both the individual heart and all cultures bear the mark of the Fall. Upon an 18 individual's rebirth in Christ, they receive a second-birth identity,¹⁴⁴ but they are still living 19 in the world, socially and legally, with what they inherited from their first birth. They 20 continue to be Egyptian, speaking Arabic, with Muslim names such as Muhammad and 21 Fatima. They still feel a part of the Muslim world, which includes their Muslim relatives and 22 friends. Legally, on their identity cards, they are Muslims, and that legal status cannot be 23 changed in most countries. The challenge is how to let their new identity in Christ (the core 24 identity) and the presence of the Holy Spirit in their lives affect their belief system, their 25 values, and their relationships. The focus becomes living in integrity under God (doing 26 justice, loving mercy, and walking humbly). Rather than seeing what was inherited in their 27 first-birth identity as a curse, they could see it as an opportunity for the gospel to penetrate 28 their existing relationships.

29 30 Two great periods in the Old Testament, the captivity in Egypt and the exile in Babylon, are 31 great object lessons for us in thinking about the Insider Model.¹⁴⁵ The way Daniel and his 32 three friends lived in Babylon provides a good illustration of an Insider approach to life and 33 belief. Daniel and his friends lived in Babylon, learned the Babylonian language and sought 34 the peace and prosperity of Babylon, while in no way compromising their relationship with

1 Yahweh.¹⁴⁶ They even accepted Babylonian names. Abed Nego means the slave of Nego, 2 who was a Babylonian god.¹⁴⁷ They were sojourners in Babylon.¹⁴⁸ In addition, we're told 3 how God used Jeremiah to prepare the people of God to go into exile in Babylon with the 4 right attitude. This attitude produced amazing results, impacting the nations from the 5 inside.¹⁴⁹ In the Old Testament, it seems that the biggest impact of Israel on the nations was 6 during the Babylonian Exile and the time that followed. Penetration, infiltration and 7 yeasting in most cases is more powerful than occupation.

8
9 Humans have three basic core affinity groups: 1) family, 2) tribal identity, which often 10 coincides with religious identity, and 3) nationalism. Most nations are built upon one tribal 11 and/or religious group maintaining power so that nationalism and tribalism often overlap. In 12 an August 2012 article¹⁵⁰ in St. Francis Magazine titled "Identity Issues for ex-Muslim 13 Christians, with Particular Reference to Marriage," Tim Green addressed the complexity of 14 how identity and community in a Muslim context are linked. The question facing a former 15 Muslim is not only "Who I am?" but also "Who we are?" Green addresses three dimensions 16 of identity: Core Identity, Social Identity and Collective Identity. He suggests that the IM 17 debate looks at the issues in black and white perspectives with a one-dimensional approach.
18 Some advise MBBs to exclusively join the new social identity of the established church, and 19 others advise them to remain in the social identity of their birth community. These two 20 options are pitched against each other in stark dichotomy as if they are the only two options.
21 In the real life of the New Testament era, nearly all converts had to relate to the "world" as 22 well as the "church." Green goes on to say that:

23 Witnessing Christians, and especially first generation witnessing Christians, 24 inevitably have a dual social identity... Equal loyalty to both groups is not 25 realistic. But to be a member of one group and simultaneously an affiliate of 26 the other is often possible. This in fact is the solution many converts achieve: 27 not always a comfortable solution, but survivable... It is by exploring different 28 'dual social identity' solutions, with all their ambiguity and their variety from 29 context to context, that both sides in the Insider Movements debate can move 30 beyond their stereotyped insistence on either of the extreme 'single identity' 31 options... Much must be left unsaid about the fascinating but complex issues 32 of multiple identity for Christ's followers from Muslim background, hybrid 33 identity for their children and collective identity labels for their new 34 communities. A good deal of research has been carried out on the analogous 35 questions of how first generation immigrants learn to fit in with their new host 36 community while simultaneously belonging to their old ethnic one, and on 1 why this creates ‘cognitive dissonance’ in some circumstances and not in 2 others. Studies also investigate how migrants’ children go on to incorporate 3 elements of both social identities while transcending both, to form a hybrid 4 ‘third culture.’ Parallels with TCKs (‘third culture kids’) are obvious 5 (emphasis added).

 6

7 Green goes on to present the following clarifications: 8

9 Firstly, I am not taking sides in the Insider Movement debate, but am simply 10 proposing new tools to help the debate move beyond its present polarized 11 stalemate. Secondly, a dual social identity is more easily maintained than a 12 dual core identity. The latter is called schizophrenia and is not to be 13 recommended!¹⁵¹
 14

15 We live in a messy and broken world. Differentiating between core and social identity might 16 provide a resolution to the issue.
 17

18 21. Uniqueness of the Gospels and the Book of Acts in History

19 The events in the life of Christ as recorded in the Gospels, as well as the emergence of the 20 church in the book of Acts, describe a unique and unrepeatable time. When the Holy Spirit 21 descended upon the disciples in Acts 2:1–4, there were unusual manifestations, including 22 tongues of fire that came and rested on each of them, allowing them to speak in tongues. It 23 was a unique event because it was the beginning of an era, and it is unrepeatable. Yet when 24 Peter and his six companions¹⁵² visited the home of Cornelius the Gentile and proclaimed 25 the good news of the gospel, the Holy Spirit came on all who heard the message, and they 26 spoke in tongues. Why did these similar manifestations of Acts 2:1–4 happen again in Acts 27 10:44–48 at the home of Cornelius the Gentile? Could it be that God wanted to convince the 28 Jewish church in Jerusalem to open their eyes to the mystery that the Gentiles who believed 29 in Christ and received the Holy Spirit, without becoming Jewish, were not second-class 30 citizens in the kingdom of God but fellow heirs?¹⁵³ We see another incident in Acts 19:7 31 with similar manifestations of speaking in tongues and receiving the Holy Spirit after Paul 32 prayed for the twelve men in Ephesus. Why did these manifestations take place? Could it be 33 that as Paul was pioneering among the Gentiles, similar manifestations to those in Acts 2:1–4 34 were needed so that the Jewish church would be convinced that Gentiles who believe in 35 Christ are fellow heirs in the Kingdom of God?¹⁵⁴
 36

¹⁵² Acts 11:12

¹⁵³ Acts 11:17–18

¹⁵⁴ Ephesians 3:6

1 In pioneering among new people groups, and particularly when it comes to breaking new 2 ground among Muslims, we often hear of unusual manifestations of signs and wonders.
3 Could it be that God allows these “unrepeatable” manifestations to occur so that the existing, 4 established church will realize these new believers are fellow heirs, even though they do not 5 share our Christian culture? We should always appreciate the redemptive-historical 6 significance of the first-century context, yet that does not mean we cannot glean principles 7 that are applicable in our contemporary setting.

PCA mission committees support not only PCA missionaries going to the Muslim world but also other missionaries that belong to a variety of denominations. Some of the following questions might be helpful in truly getting to know the missionary more deeply and finding out whether or not it is good stewardship of the church’s resources to continue supporting that missionary. The questions are broader and deeper than just ministry approaches and strategies. Some of the questions apply to all missionaries, and others specifically apply to those working with Muslims.

Questions for all missionaries

1. Do the missionaries have a consistent walk with God? Do they have a daily time in the Scriptures?
2. Is there fellowship on the team of missionaries? Are they getting along well with one another? (One of the biggest reasons missionaries leave the field is because they do not know how to get along with one another.)
3. Does the team of missionaries include those with gifting in evangelism and pioneering? If not, why not?
5. Are they living in purity? What guards do men have against addiction to pornography?
6. Are they struggling with the burden of raising finances? How can our church do more than just send them monthly gifts? How can we genuinely equip them?
7. What promises are the missionaries claiming for their lives and ministry? What vision is gripping their souls?
8. How are the missionaries doing as husbands, wives, and parents? What are the strengths, and what are the areas in which growth is needed? “How can we pray for you?”

Questions for missionaries in Muslim ministries

9. Do the missionaries struggle with their own identities on the field? Do those around them see authenticity or deception regarding their identities? What do they need to do to remedy the situation?
10. Are they living among Muslims, or are they bunkering down in insecurity and spending a great deal of their time on the internet, escaping the responsibility of being in the world and not of the world?
11. What list do they have of Muslim contacts for whom they are praying and building bridges of relationships?
12. Who are the MBBs they are discipling? What materials are they using in discipling? Are their MBBs living among Muslims, or are they bunkering down in insecurity and fear?

- 1 13. What books are they reading this year? How do they agree and disagree with the various 2 authors?
- 3 14. What do the missionaries really think of Muhammad and the Qur'an? What do the 4 MBBs in their ministry really think of Muhammad and the Qur'an?
- 5 15. What church do they attend on the mission field? How do they communicate to their 6 MBBs their convictions about Hebrews 10:24–25?
- 7 16. Is there regular preaching and teaching, study, and obedience to the Word of God by the 8 team of missionaries and by the MBBs?
- 9 17. Have they read the Westminster Confession of Faith? What do they think of it? What do 10 they think of the usefulness of church councils and confessions of faith in ministry to 11 Muslims?
- 12 18. Are their MBBs focused on maintaining or developing strong relationships with family 13 and friends in their birth communities? Are they earning the right to speak by 14 demonstrating a lifestyle that has been transformed by the gospel? Are the MBBs 15 becoming better students, better husbands, better wives, better employees as a result of 16 their coming to know Christ? How?
- 17 19. How do these MBBs communicate with family and friends on what they really think of 18 Muhammad and the Qur'an when they are asked?
- 19 20. How do the missionaries encourage the MBBs not to rupture their relationships with 20 family and friends and yet at the same time not to live in deception?

23. Affirmations and Denials

21
22 In general, the Minority Report is in agreement with the Affirmations and Denials and 23 endorses them.

In Conclusion

25
26 The very influential MBB insiders are those who are fully surrendered to Christ and who are 27 called to penetrate and infiltrate Islam. They are not insiders in order to avoid persecution.
28 They are insiders because God calls them to stay as yeast within their birth culture, rather 29 than being yeast that is scooped out from among their own people and placed in a 30 “foreign”¹⁵⁵ pot of dough. They are called to stay relationally connected to their relatives 31 and friends in their birth communities, focusing on developing relationships so that the 32 gospel can spread rapidly and be honored (2 Thessalonians 3:1). These insiders may feel 33 called to stay within the non-sinful aspects in the Muslim world, in their birth communities, 34 (Zone R) and should transition out from the sinful aspects, be they theological or cultural, of ¹⁵⁵ “Foreign” could be the established church made up of people who belong to Christendom, or a group of missionaries. It could be a ghetto church like the church of street sweepers in Pakistan.

1 the Muslim world (Zone S). These brave insiders ought to be motivated not by fear but by a 2 calling to penetrate and infiltrate the Muslim world by being salt and light among their own 3 people.
4

5 A Christian couple from Egypt was visiting the USA in 2012. They have the means and the 6 ability to emigrate to America, and they have Green Cards, as well. I asked them about the 7 date of their move to the States since the situation in Egypt was deteriorating. Their response 8 was astounding. They said that they decided to shred their Green Cards because they are 9 called to Egypt and they do not want to miss out on what God is doing among Muslims, in 10 spite of the bleak future for Christendom. It seems that the gospel, like yeast, is penetrating 11 the Muslim society in Egypt, and God's people in all denominations are becoming united in 12 an unprecedented manner.
13

14 It will be counterproductive on our part, as Christians in the West, to try to control the 15 movement of the Holy Spirit as the gospel penetrates Muslim communities. Perhaps we 16 should watch and pray for those true insiders who desire to transform the Muslim world 17 from within—that they would serve Him wholeheartedly, living a transformed life and 18 proclaiming the gospel without fear. We hope and pray that the gospel would penetrate the 19 Muslim society in Egypt and other parts of the Muslim world in a way similar to how it 20 penetrated the Roman Empire in the first three centuries.

Attachment 1: The C1 - C6 Scale

The C1–C6 Scale was developed by Johan Travis as a descriptive tool to show the various expressions of the Christ-centered communities.¹⁵⁶

| C1 | C2 | C3 | C4 | C5 | C6 |
|--|--|---|--|---|---|
| Traditional church using a language different from the mother tongue of the local Muslim community | Traditional church using the mother tongue of the local Muslim community | Contextualized Christ-centered community using the mother tongue and some non-Muslim local cultural forms | Contextualized Christ-centered community using the mother tongue and biblically acceptable socio-religious Islamic forms | Community of Muslims who follow Jesus yet remain culturally and officially Muslim | Secret or underground Muslim followers of Jesus with little or no community |

Attachment 2: The Journey of a Muslim background believer

If you are interested in reading the confidential journey of a MBB known to two men on the committee, please send an email to nabeel@nabeeljabbour.com and he will send you a PDF on the condition that it will not be forwarded or blogged because it is CONFIDENTIAL. Furthermore this document will be sent only to those who have carefully read this report.

Attachment 3: “What do you think of Muhammad?”

A certain missionary in a Muslim country often gets asked the question, “What do you think of Muhammad?” His response:

“You know that Muhammad is not my prophet; he is your prophet. Although my beliefs about him are not like yours, I do respect him. Politically, he was a reformer, a statesman, and a national leader. Religiously, he warned people against idolatry and called them to worship one God. He also said many positive things about my Lord Jesus Christ. I believe each of these reasons makes him worthy of my respect.”

Are Yahweh and Allah the same God? The Committee Report addresses this issue in a comprehensive and scholarly fashion. Here I would like to address it very briefly and pragmatically as an Arab Christian and with a reference to the word Isa for Jesus which the Committee Report does not address.

Yahweh is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. Allah is the Arabic word for God. It literally means “The God,” while the word ilaaah in Arabic means “a god.” Dios is the Spanish word for God, and Allah is the Arabic word for God. Bibles in Arabic in all translations are full of the word Allah.

There is only one God, and He is Yahweh, the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ. It is the tendency of all human beings to bring down, as it were, that almighty God and to place Him in our little boxes. Those little gods that we tend to create are not the Almighty God. The Jews at the time of Jeremiah did it, although they gave him the name Yahweh. The Pharisees at the time of Jesus did the same thing, and they called him Yahweh. Yahweh, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, cannot be placed into a box.

Are Allah of the Arab Christians and Yahweh the same God? Yes, when we do not have a veil over our eyes and when we do not bring Him down to become our servant who is supposed to answer our prayers and do what we think He should do. Whenever I impose upon God my projection of Him, the image I create is no longer Yahweh, the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Are Allah of Muslims and Yahweh the same God? Yes, when the veil is lifted from their eyes and Muslims see Him as the Father of the Lord Jesus Christ. Fine-tuning to see Yahweh as He truly is takes place through Christ.¹⁵⁷ Christ is the visible image of the invisible God.

There is only one Yahweh, yet all people in all religions project their image of what He is like and assume that they are worshipping that Yahweh when in reality they are worshipping their own creations.

The Allah or God in Islam has 99 attributes, and we would agree with most of them. But the huge missing names are “Father of the Lord Jesus Christ” and “our heavenly Father.” Are there similarities between our God and their God? Yes, there are similarities, but there is a huge difference. Muslims are trying to connect with and worship the only true God, but there is a veil over their eyes, and the only way it can be removed is through Christ.

¹⁵⁷ Colossians 1:15

1 Arab Christians call Jesus Yasou', while the Qur'an use the name Isa for Jesus. What is the 2 background and why the difference? Imagine if someone came behind Jesus and His 3 disciples and called out to Him using his English name "Jesus." Would He have responded?
4 Would he have recognized his English or Spanish names? His name was Yashou' in Hebrew 5 and Aramaic.

6
7 A pivotal moment in history is recorded in John 12:20–24. "Now there were some Greeks 8 among those who went up to worship at the Feast. They came to Philip, who was from 9 Bethsaida in Galilee, with a request. 'Sir,' they said, 'we would like to see Jesus.' Philip 10 went to tell Andrew; Andrew and Philip in turn told Jesus. Jesus replied, 'The hour has 11 come for the Son of Man to be glorified. I tell you the truth, unless a kernel of wheat falls to 12 the ground and dies, it remains only a single seed. But if it dies, it produces many seeds.'"

13
14 It appears a bit strange that Jesus started talking about His coming suffering and crucifixion 15 upon hearing the news that Greeks want to see Him. What is the connection? It seems that 16 until the crucifixion and the resurrection, He was Yashou' because He came to the lost sheep 17 of Israel. But after the resurrection, He became not only the Savior of Israel but also the 18 Savior of the world. To the Greeks He became Yisus, to the Jews He continued to be 19 Yashou'. To the Muslims He became Isa, and to the Japanese He became He-soos.

20
21 In the Arabic Bibles the name for Jesus is Yasou', and it came from His Hebrew name 22 Yashou'. The only difference is an ssss sound in the middle rather than an shshsh sound.
23 When the Qur'an was being written down in Arabic, Al-Masih (The Christ) for Christ was 24 the same in the Qur'an and the Arabic Bible. When it came to the name Jesus, it was 25 translated from Yesus to Isa in the Qur'an, which is derived from the Greek and Syriac 26 languages rather than Hebrew. The same applied to names of Old Testament prophets in the 27 Qur'an. The prophet Jonah is called Yonah in Hebrew and Yunas in the Greek Septuagint 28 and Yunis in the Qur'an. The name of Elijah appears in the Qur'an as Ilyas¹⁵⁸ or 29 Ilyasin,¹⁵⁹ which have no connection to the original Hebrew but to the Greek Syriac 30 translations.¹⁶⁰
